ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tamoo, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life [illegible] and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to perform a [illegible] of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a complaint all from a slight [illegible] at the fountain-head of the blood! As if you had thrown some earth [illegible] in a pure spring, from which you drank or [illegible] in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life goes [illegible] out. These Pills not only purify the blood, but [illegible] all the secretions of the body; they cure, therefore, unrivalled as a

THE £1,500 Conger Case.

BOTH SIDES OF THE QUESTION.—BOTH JUDGMENTS.

Let every elector Read and decide in his own mind whether the Accused is Guilty or not.

IN CHANCERY:
THE CORPORATION OF PETERBOROUGH versus
CONGER AND WHITMARSH.

JUDGMENT. THE CHANCELLOR:

This is in some respects a most painful case. The defendants, who occupy a respectable position in society, were both examined by the plaintiffs, but their evidence upon material points, well known to both, is so utterly inconsistent, that the statement of one or other must have been wilfully untrue.

The main facts of the case, however, are simple and undisputed. The Municipality of the Township of Wolford being anxious to assist the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company in constructing a branch line to Merrickville, passed a By-law, authorising the Municipality to raise £20,000 sterling upon the credit of the Municipal Loan Fund, for that purpose. That By-law was duly approved by his Excellency in Council, and in the year 1856 Debentures for £20,000 sterling secured upon the Municipal Loan Fund, were issued by the Receiver General of the Province, to the Municipality of the Township of Wolford. The Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company having abandoned the prospect of constructing a branch line to Merrickville,—the Township of Wolford became anxious to relieve themselves from liability in respect of the debentures in question, and at a meeting of the Municipal Council of the Township of Wolford held on the 10th of October, 1857, it was resolved:—"That the £25,000 currency, Municipal Loan Fund Debentures borrowed from the Government on a By-law passed by this Council are not required, and that Mr. Whitmarsh be ordered to return the same, and he is hereby authorised to do so, and that a copy of this resolution be furnished to Mr. Whitmarsh with the seal of the Corporation attached." That resolution having been carried, the debentures in question were, in accordance with its provisions, delivered to Mr. Whitmarsh, the defendant in this suit, who was the Reeve of the Township of Wolford.

At this period the Municipality of the Town of Peterboro' were anxious to induce "the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway Company" to construct what is known as the "Millbrook Branch" of that Road, and with that view offered to take stock to the amount of £30,000; to enable the Municipality to meet the calls upon the stock, it was proposed that they should borrow £25,000 upon the credit of the Municipal Loan Fund of Upper Canada; and at a meeting of the Town Council held on the 12th of October, 1857, certain steps were taken for that purpose. The Official Minute of what passed on that occasion has been given, and is in these words:—"Mr. Conger introduced the subject of a possibility of obtaining £25,000 through the Municipal Loan Fund, and after some explanations it was moved by Mr. Conger, seconded by Mr. Scott,—that a By-law to enable the Council to borrow £25,000, be now read a first time,"—that was carried, and on the motion of the same persons, the By-law was read a second time, and ordered to be published according to law. On the 14th of November, 1857, the By-law having been in the interim approved of by a public meeting of the Rate-payers, Mr. Conger moved that a By-law to enable the Council to subscribe for Stock to the Port Hope Lindsay and Beaverton Railway Company, to the extent of £25,000, for the purpose of aiding in constructing the Millbrook branch of the said Railway should be read a third time and passed. And that motion having been passed, it was moved by Mr. Hutton, seconded by Mr. Hogan,—"That W. S. Conger proceed to Toronto to obtain the sanction of the Government to the By-law now read, and negociate for the exchange of the said debentures," which was carried. The Mr. Conger referred to in these proceedings is the Defendant in this suit, who was then a member of the Municipal Council of the Town of Peterboro'.

On the 18th November, 1857, a letter was written by the defendant Whitmarsh to the Receiver General of the Province, which is in these words:—

"Russell's Hotel,
Toronto, 19th Nov. 1857.

"DEAR SIR:—In pursuance of my instructions from the Municipality of Wolford I have the honor to enclose you a resolution of that body, certified by its seal, that the £25,000 Municipal Loan Fund Debentures issued by the Government, be returned, [illegible] with instructions from your department to hand them over. I beg also to inform you, that the duties and [illegible] of the Municipality, with [illegible] debentures, is now in the hands of Messrs. Conger & Jones, Barristers, Peterboro', who are [illegible] by this Municipality.

"E. H. WHITMARSH."

The resolution enclosed in that letter is that the Reeve of the 10th of October, 1857, to which I have already referred.

Another letter from Whitmarsh to the Receiver General upon the same subject has been put in proof, which is in these words:—

"Toronto, 26th Nov. 1857.

"DEAR SIR,—I have given instructions to exchange [illegible] Municipality of Wolford, authorising the Municipality to return to your department the £25,000 c. c. Municipal Loan Fund Debentures issued to that Municipality, and to receive in lieu thereof [illegible] Debentures of the Province of Canada, [illegible] Municipality will [illegible] have your [illegible] despatch [illegible]

On the 28th of November, 1857, the By-law passed by the Municipal Council of the Town of Peterboro' was approved by his Excellency in Council.

On the 28th of November, 1857, the Executive Council took into consideration a Memorandum from the Receiver General in which, after stating the loan to the Township of Wolford, and the desire to have it cancelled, the Receiver General submitted to the Council, "that authority should be given to bill to cancel the loan to the Township of Wolford, and receive back the debentures and supply the same, bearing interest from the 1st of January, then next, to the loan solicited by the Town of Peterboro', the latter Municipality paying up the sum of £64 18s. 8d., contingent expenses due under the Wolford Loan. And the Committee recommended that the loan to the Township of Wolford and the debentures issued thereon, be cancelled, and that the Receiver General be authorised to issue in lieu of such Debentures, Debentures to the like amount to the Municipality of the Town of Peterboro'." This Minute of Council was duly approved and the same day the Deputy Receiver General wrote to Mr. Whitmarsh, and having acknowledged the letter of the 24th inst. he says, "In reply, I beg to state that this matter having been brought under the notice of the Government, I am authorised to inform you that his Excellency in Council has been pleased to meet your views on the subject. I am further instructed to state that having practised the order to Mr. Ridout for the delivery of the Debentures, that the same have been duly handed over to this Department, thus relieving the Municipality of Wolford from all and every charge relative to the same. I may in conclusion state, that your action in this matter has relieved the Township from a charge hanging over it of £720 for Sinking Fund, as well as £64 8s. 8d., contingent account.

"ANDERSON, D.R.G."

On the 29th of November, 1857, the day on which the Order in Council was passed, the Debentures which had been issued to the Township of Wolford having been cancelled, new Debentures for £20,000 sterling, were handed to the defendant Conger, as the agent for the Municipality of the Town of Peterboro'. Out of the Debentures then handed to Conger, as the agent of the Plaintiffs, he admits that he disposed of four, each drawn for the sum of £500 sterling, and he admits that of the amount realised by that sale a sum of £1551 15s. was never paid to the Plaintiffs. That amount was either paid to Whitmarsh or divided between the Defendants upon some under-handed arrangement between them, of which neither the Plaintiffs nor the Municipality of Wolford had any knowledge.

The Municipal Council of the Town of Peterboro', met on the 1st Dec. 1857, and the minutes of what took place at that meeting in relation to this matter is in these words, "Mr. Conger stated at the Council that he had been successful in getting the By-law passed by the Government and had obtained the debentures and that they were then in the hands of the Town Treasurer."

Then it was moved that a check do issue in favor of Mr. Conger for the sum of £19, being the amount expended by him in negotiating the transfer of debentures."—And it was then moved that the thanks of the Council were due, and were thereby tendered to Mr. Conger for the interest and energy he had displayed in procuring the passage by the government of the By-law, and obtaining the debentures under the By-law. All the facts to which I have referred have been clearly established, and keeping this in view there will not be much difficulty I think in arriving at a proper conclusion, upon the pleadings and evidence in the case.

The Bill states, in effect that the Plaintiffs were desirous of having the Millbrook branch of the Port Hope, Lindsay, and Beaverton Railway constructed, and for the purpose they offered to take £[illegible] of the Company's stock; that the [illegible] raising funds to meet the calls upon this stock was debated, when the defendant, Conger, who was then a member of the Town Council, [illegible] to know where £25,000 of debentures from the Municipal Loan fund could be got, but that about £1,500 would have to be paid by the Plaintiffs to the municipality, which held, or was entitled to the said debentures for interest, and payments towards the sinking fund which the said municipality had paid, or was liable to pay to the government upon the said debentures," that Conger did not inform the Plaintiffs of the name of the Municipality which held the debentures, upon the statement that his duties as such [illegible] (the exception) that he then drew the said debentures from the Council chamber to obtain with any municipality which held, or was entitled to such debentures, upon the terms of paying to, or for the said municipality the said interest, and sinking fund account which said municipality had paid or was liable to pay the government. "That Conger then entered into negotiations with Whitmarsh for the purchase of the [illegible] debentures, in the Township of Wolford [illegible] of the Municipality [illegible] that the said debentures had been issued to the township of Wolford upon the security of the Municipal Loan Fund Debentures of the Province, and that the only security which the Government possessed [illegible] by the government upon the Municipality of Wolford was a sum of about £19 [illegible] their share of the expenses of the Municipality [illegible] Municipality of Wolford had no other [illegible] Municipality [illegible] Municipality [illegible] Municipality

...TICE XVII.

It has been proved by numerous experiments that the seeds of most kinds of grain ...ripe with greater certainty when covered to the depth of about one inch, and those of the ... grains at from one to three fourth of an inch, so that it is desirable to have the seed deposited in the ground as near to the above depth as possible. In order to accomplish this the surface of the ground should be made smooth by harrowing or other means, and the grain scattered regularly over it; then the harrow should be passed over each way which will be enough to cover the seed. There is another advantage gained by making the surface smooth before sowing, which is this: that in ploughing land where the furrow turns over comparatively mild, such as stubble land that is ploughed in Spring, the furrows lap over each other and a vacant space is invariably left under furrow, directly under the hollow space on the surface into which the greater part of the seed is apt to be drawn by the harrow, and should a dry summer follow its effects on the crop are much more severe as the roots have penetrated into the vacant space just at the time the drought is greatest, whereas when the surface is made smooth the seeds are as likely to remain on the solid furrow as in the space between them, (for the reasons above given and others of minor importance I prefer to have the ground made smooth before sowing the seed.) I have heard it objected that large seeds such as peas, &c., do not cover as well in this way, but after careful observation for the last 10 or 12 years I cannot say that I have found this to be the case,—on the contrary I am of opinion that as a rule they will be found to cover better, the exceptions are on very heavy stiff clay, particularly that which has been plowed some length of time before sowing. The common practice is to sow clover and timothy seed before the last harrowing when put in with another crop, but I think a better way is to sow them on the surface after the harrowing is finished. In Hind's Treatise on Grasses a number of experiments are given in covering grass-seed at different depths. It was found that on an average of moist and dry weather one-fourth of an inch was the best depth; the greatest depth at which it would vegetate I do not recollect, but I think it was 1½ inches; but it was found that in moist weather all our common grasses vegetated equally well when left on the surface; and I believe from observation that such is the case, provided the soil be fine and mellow. I say where the grass does not generally catch well on Fall Wheat as on Spring grain, which I attribute to the want of the above conditions in the soil. The seeds which I have described above is what I consider the best. We can do with the implements we at present possess for the purpose, namely, the common harrow; but I have long since came to the conclusion that in some of our agricultural implements is improvement so much needed as in this. I consider the harrow a very inefficient implement for the purpose for which it is used. It is the only implement we have the precise effects of which, or the amount of work it performs, we cannot exactly determine. In using the plow for example we can tell exactly the depth to which it penetrates, the quantity of soil turned over, and the relative position it occupies after the operation; in short, we can tell before we commence what we intend to do, and after we have finished, what we have done; but in using the harrow we cannot tell either of these things, whether it be for covering seed or for pulverizing the soil,—all we can do is to repeat the operation until we think we have accomplished our purpose. But to return to the operation of seed-sowing: It has become common in Britain to drill in all kinds of grain with a machine made for the purpose, and the practice has been extensively copied in the United States and in the older settled portions of Canada. I have had no experience in the matter personally, and therefore cannot give any opinion of my own, but from a very lengthened and able discussion on the subject which has been carried on in the columns of the American Agricultural papers it appears to have its ...its as well as its excellencies. One great objection urged against it is that the drilling is all extra work, as the land has to be made smooth before the operation is performed. Another is that the seed being placed so close together in the drills prevents the plants from growing so healthy when young, as the roots are more confined and cannot get sufficient nourishment until they push out into the space between the drills. It is said also that the entire crop by following the drills has a better chance of carrying on its ravages on the roots of the young plants. On the whole I think there is no doubt some force in the first objection, but I cannot think the second amounts to anything, as the roots have two sides to extend from, and they must be very thick to interfere with each other before the plants have made considerable progress, and as for the third objection we are happily not troubled with the wire worm in this country to any serious extent. In regard to the advantages of the drill there is no doubt that it possesses a very important one in the ability of the operator to deposit the seed at the exact depth he wishes. It is evident that some specified depth is the best, and with the drill we can ascertain precisely what we find by observation to be best, and practise accordingly.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel-engraving, 30x36 inches, entitled,

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS."

2nd.—One copy, one year, of the elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The fine superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 36 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder, postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscription. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five Memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $5 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

Address,
C. L. DERBY, Actuary C.A.A.
546 Broadway, N.Y.

N. B.—Subscriptions received by R. S. Patterson, Hon'y Secretary for United Counties of Peterboro' & Victoria. Where specimen Engravings and Art Journal can be seen.

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter is mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs are deranged. The stomach, liver and bowels suffer perhaps. The head is oppressed, or assumes a sickening of pain. The action of the heart is quickened, and so the circulation is faster. Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment in many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, RHEUMATISM, ERRORS OF ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for keeping the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall remove the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won the confidence of the people for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is now strictly unnecessary for us to recount the evidences of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we do not deem it necessary to publish certificates of its cures here. Its reputation is at home, and those who have used it need no assurance from us that it is the best remedy we can offer for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, and for the relief of consumptive patients in advanced stages of the disease. While it is true that this remedy will cure the most obstinate cases of Pulmonary Complaints, even after the patient has been given over by the physicians, and the friends have prepared for the worst, it is also true that it will cure the slight cough, the cold, the hoarseness, which, if neglected, are the sure precursors of those complaints. Keep it by you, and when the first symptoms appear, check the disease in its infancy, and prevent it from becoming fixed and incurable. Every family should have it in store, as a protection against the early attacks of disease, which, if neglected, may prove fatal before the remedy can be obtained.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are the result of many years' labor to perfect the most effectual purgative that can be made, which should be safe and certain in its operation. They are compounded from vegetable products, which are safe and sure in their effects, but entirely changed by chemical processes, which greatly increase their curative powers, and enable us to combine in the smallest possible space the greatest amount of purgative matter. Hence they are the most compact, the most powerful, and the best Pill we can make. While they are searching to the foulest internal humors, they are mild in their operation, and produce the results of healthful action. They purify the blood, and stimulate it into healthy vitality. As a consequence of their purifying properties, the harmful vices in the blood, which make disease and sickness, are thrown out of every body, and when many different complaints are cured by the same medicine, the remedy is found in the purification of the blood, which is the fountain of health. Every one knows when he is sick, but few understand the cause. Nine times in ten it arises from impure blood, and the best way to get well is to take a cathartic medicine, and purify the blood. Nature will then throw off the disease, and the patient will recover his health. Sometimes the liver is the organ primarily affected, and then the bile, which it should secrete, is thrown into the blood, and carried with it to every part of the system, producing sometimes one form of disease, and sometimes another. Let the liver be regulated, and the bile will be prevented from tainting the blood. Let the blood be purified, and the whole body will be healthy. These Pills not only purify the blood, but regulate all the functions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR SEDENTARY HABITUDES.

INFORMATION WANTED.

A DAUGHTER wishes to learn the present whereabouts of her mother, whom she has not seen for the last thirty-five years. Her maiden name was Polly Cook; her first husband's name was Warren Stone. It is said she married in 1843, a person named De Long, who was at that time engaged in some way in the manufacture of oil in the Upper part of Upper Canada. Any information respecting her will be gratefully received by addressing the subscriber, at 58 Frank Street, Rochester, N.Y.—Canadian papers will confer a favour upon one who has long been deprived of a mother's affections, by giving the above an insertion, entire or in part.

Poetry.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

Life is a race where some succeed,
While others are beginning;
'Tis best at times, as others speed,
That gives an early winning.
But if you chance to fall behind,
Ne'er slacken your endeavour,
But keep this watchword fixed in mind,
'Tis better late than never.

If you can keep abreast, 'tis well,
But never trip your neighbour;
'Tis noble when you can excel
By honest, valiant labour;
But if you are outstripped at last,
From no as bold as ever;
Remember, though you are surpassed,
'Tis better late than never.

Never labor for an idle boast
Of victory o'er another;
But while you strive your uttermost,
Deal fairly with a brother.
Whatever your station, do your best,
And hold your purpose firmer;
And if you fail to head the rest,
'Tis better late than never.

Choose well the path in which you run,
Succeed by noble daring;
Then tho' the last, when once 'tis won,
Your crown is worth the wearing.
Then never fret if left behind,
Nor slacken your endeavour,
But ever keep the truth in mind—
'Tis better late than never.

THE LITTLE HEROINE.

"Morning again!" And the weary, wasted invalid lifted his head from the pillow, and looked pitifully over the dull room. "Oh, that the night had been longer! To the wretched, sleep is dear. My poor, poor wife—my darling babes—must they freeze and starve! O, God! it is too much!" and with tears gushing from his eyes, the pale man buried his head in the county covering, and groaned aloud.

It was no wonder he was out of heart on that cold, dark, December day. At best, he had a hard struggle to get food and clothes for his family, and for the past six months the struggle had been almost desperate, for he and had been unable to assist him in the least, being confined to bed with a slow wasting disease.

His little daughter Marie, a pretty child of twelve, kept the room tidy, and herself and two little brothers like-wise. By the aid of her mother's whispered directions, she also cooked the scanty meals, and even managed to keep up the weekly washing and ironing.

"My little marbeam, the father fondly called her; while the mother would say, in her low, sweet tones, "Our angel."

One night the young housekeeper waited till it was pitch dark for her father to come home to his frugal supper, and then, with fearful forebodings at her heart, undressed the little boys and put them to bed, and tied on her hood and cloak to go for him. A crowd met her at the very threshold. With a wild cry, she rushed towards the inanimate form they carried upon a board. It was her father brought home to them with a broken leg.

A week had passed since the misfortune. By the sale of their few pieces of furniture the wolf had been kept from the door. But now, nothing remained save the coarse bed on which the distressed ones slept. No coals for the little grate; no tea for the feverish lips; no crusts for the famished children. What should be done?

It was a question little Mary asked herself again and again, as she lay there watching the few pale sunbeams that struggled through the windows. And she asked it oftener after she had risen and dressed herself and brothers, and smoothed the two beds. Bread they must have that day, they were all faint even now, and the boys clamored for their breakfast. Suddenly a bright thought came to the little daughter. She remembered having seen in some coffee houses, young girls, no taller than herself, waiting upon customers. Perhaps they would try her. "If they only would," she murmured softly. "I am handy, quick and patient, and I would try so hard to oblige." I am pretty, too, she might have added, but there was a spark of vanity in her heart; for she was a sweet child, with a brow like a sunny snow drift, and eyes like the spring violets that nestle in the woodlands. "I will try at least, and see what I can do!" and after watching a few moments the busy shop of the parents, she whispered to the little boys that she was going out to get some bread for them, and then hurried away.

She did go to the baker's but her pitiful story failed to reach his hard heart, and there were tears on her cold cheek as she turned away. Even if she secured a place, she could hope for no wages till Saturday, and there were four weary days between this and then. Bread would be too late if she waited till then. What could she do—beg? She asked herself the question with a quivering lip. Never before had their poverty driven them to that stern, and it was hard, even now, with the picture of that famished home fresh in her vision, to plead for charity. But she did it.

Again and again she said to the passers by, "Please sir, please madam, give me a penny to buy some bread for my sick parents."

But the gentlemen had their pockets crammed to their sides, and the ladies were enveloped in furs, and it was too much trouble to hunt their pocket-books or purses just to supply a beggar's needs.

"Go to the poor-house," said one, at last, more charitable than the rest. "The city provides for such as you."

It was a new idea to her, and first as her face could carry her the word, and entering by breakfast. Lucky child for many as the succeeding months.

"I will report the matter to the corporation," said the woman, quickly catching a mere sense of the case and the position of the street. "Come to-morrow morning, and I will do what I can for you."

"To-morrow!" She could be too much to wait so far by that time, and what would become of the rest! With a heavy heart she went home, having no courage to propose herself as a waiter to any of the coffee houses she passed on her way.

"Did you get some?" cried the boys, as they gathered around her, pulling off her cloak to see if it were hidden in her apron or under her arms.

"Did you get some?" said two faint voices from the bed in the corner, and the coverlet was thrown off and two pair of thin white hands were put forth.

"No, no," she answered plaintively, "but I will try again. Keep up good hope—there will be plenty out of the oven now. Yes, plenty," she said to herself as she buttoned her cloak on the threshold; "plenty, and I'll have some too. They shall not starve. Man and woman forsake me; God doesn't hear me any longer; there is nothing left for me to do but steal."

Her face paled as she spoke, and there was a wild wrestle in her heart. Then she went on quickly, pausing an instant before each baker's window, and looking anxiously within. By and by she found one that seemed empty. A whole pile of steaming loaves lay out upon the counter. She rushed in and seized one, and hiding it under her cloak, fled madly up the street. But the baker had seen her from the little sitting-room door, and was after her, crying lustily, "stop thief, stop thief!" A crowd followed her, and the poor child was soon run down.

"A clear case," said the police officer, who took her in charge—"the property found on her. She must go to the court room."

In vain she pleaded with them, and told her story.

They must do their duty; she might have begged; she might have gone to the workhouse; there was no excuse for stealing, at any rate."

No excuse, and her mother was dying for food!

An important trial was just closing, and all the avenues to the court house were closed.

"They'll be through soon," said the officer to the baker; "we'll wait here a few moments. No danger of her getting away while my grip is on her," and he tightened his hold on her shrinking arm till the flesh quivered with pain.

"Take me home first, she said sadly; they will worry about me so. My poor mother will die if she thinks I am lost."

"They'll soon find out where you are," said he gruffly. "Bad news is like lightning; it travels fast."

"O, dear! O, dear! What will become of them?" and she sobbed aloud.

A little girl about her own age was passing by—a rich man's child; you would have known it by the outwrought dress and cloak, the rich velvet hood, and the comfy for tipped muff. But there was no false pride hidden under the expensive raiment; a warm heart was beating there, and its sympathies went out largely toward the little prisoner. For a moment she paused, as if irresolute upon her plan of action; then laying her mittened hand gently on the officer's fingers, she said politely:

"May I speak with her?"

"O, yes; she's not committed yet."

Putting her soft, rosy cheek close to the purple-cold one, she whispered very earnestly. Marie told her touching story, and begged she would, by the love which she bore for her own mother, find out their humble home, and comfort the distressed ones.

"I will, I will," the stranger replied eagerly; and don't you cry any more; my father knows the judge, and he'll get you away to-morrow. Good bye—keep up a good heart," and off she ran.

She knew her mother to be one of the most charitable of women, and hastened home to tell her the joyful news. But unfortunately, she had just gone out to ride, she would not be back till dinner time.

"What can I do?" she cried and wrung her hands. They were cold, and bread, and tea, and so many things, and I have only ten cents in my pocket. She sat down on the marble steps, and pondered. All at once her eyes brightened, and a beautiful color flushed her face.

"I'll do it," she said resolutely; mamma will forgive me when she knows all. Without fire, without food, nearly naked, quite starved. O, she will be glad I thought of her;" and she bounded down the street and rushed around the corner.

Pushing open the plate glass door of the most fashionable hair dresser in the city, she went quietly up to an attendant, and asked to see Monsieur B. He ushered her into an inner room, saying he would call him.

Her heart fluttered while she waited, but her resolution did not fail her.

"Ah! c'est ma belle Therese;" said Monsieur B. took her hand kindly.

"Good morning dear. Come to have your ringlets dressed for the ball to-night?—no," as the shook her head, "at your aunt's—you go certainly; you are one of Monsieur's best pupils.

"No," she stammered.

"What is it, then, ma petite?"

For a moment her lips quivered; then she spoke up quickly:

"You said once, sir, you would give me an order for my curls. Will you do it now—for—this minute?"

The fair-skinned was astonished. What could the child mean? To cut off those curls, long, silken and gold colored, the pride and glory of many mothers—it would be sacrilege almost for a month! to have done it; to sell them was surely a crime.

"Does she mean sure—does she know you mean that?"

"No, sir, but she will not blame me, when I tell her how it was. O, no; she is too good."

"And dear is Rose Belle? Make a friend of me, and tell me how it comes you ask me to buy your hair?" and he chucked her into the room as a father might.

She hesitated, and then quickly her heart to him. There was a mist in her eyes when she finished her pitiful story. He walked the floor a moment, as if irresolute, then stopping before her, he took out his pocket-book and handed her two bill rights. She put down in her purse, and then quickly took off her hood.

"Not now, ma petite, some night, he said huskily; not now—I am too busy; to-morrow will do as well. Or, stop, I will come in this evening. Till then, do not mention it to any one. Go now on your mission, ma cher de charite," and he led her to the door.

How quick her little feet flew over the pavements! she could hardly speak when she reached the baker's shop.

"Two loaves, sir—large ones, too," she gasped, and threw down one of the gold pieces.

The man stared at her curiously.

The color rose to her brow, but she said nothing, and hurried away with her warm, fragrant bundle.

"Is it you, Marie? What kept you so long, daughter? Quick! break me a crumb I am faint."

Like an angel the little stranger looked to them as she glided in, her cheeks like apple blossoms and her hair falling over her shoulders like ripples of sunshine.

"Marie cannot come home yet," she said in a voice that was sweet as a robin's in May-time. "But she will return to-morrow perhaps this evening. She has sent me with the bread. See the two nice loaves I have brought you," and she tore them in fragments. Tears coursed down her face as she saw how eagerly they chunked them. She had never dreamed of poverty like this; never known how hungry folks can be and live.

"I must go, now," she said, opening the door, "but I will come again soon, and make you comfortable," and she hurried to the nearest grocery and bought a basket full of provisions, and engaged him to send in some kindlings and coal.

The little boys helped her to build a fire in the cold stove, and when it blazed merrily, she put over the kettle and soon had a refreshing cup of tea for the invalid, and a platter of smoking potatoes for the children.

"Where is Marie? do you know, little angel?" asked the sick mother as she handed back the cup.

"O, yes; I know," she answered cheerfully. "Didn't I say she would be home early to-morrow? Don't worry. Better days are coming. I'll bring her in the morning. Good-bye."

It was as though a fairy had come and vanished; a kind-hearted fairy too,—for besides the supply of coal and food, a half eagle lay in the sick father's hand.

Murmuring to himself all the tender adjectives in the French language, the good hair-dresser immediately hastened to the court room. The judge was a friend of his too, and he hoped to save the child from prison. She had not been brought in, the court having adjourned for half an hour.

He asked for a private interview with the judge. As soon as it was granted, he told him all—Marie's distress, and the generous kindness of the little Therese.

"Poor child! good child!" said the listener wiping his glasses.

"She must go to prison, I suppose, but it shall be a chamber in my own house.—Go into court and tell the same story over. It will be better than a lawyer's plea."

He did so, and there was not a dry eye in the audience when he ceased. Even the baker hung his head, and seemed to mean! Before the breathless silence had been broken, he looked up piteously and said to the judge!

"I withdraw my complaint; let her go with me and take all she wants."

The spacious room rang with applause, and when the enthusiasm was at its height, a thoughtful old man went about the room [illegible] People's fingers found their pocket-books [illegible] and poured the collection into Marie's apron, she entranced with joy. No more cold, no more hunger, no more unkindness that winter; they were rich.

The baker took home home himself, and told her at the door not to worry about bread till spring, for his waggon would leave them all they needed, every morning. How lightly she bounded up the staircase. It was like a bird's footfall, a singing bird in the time of flowers.

"Have you come, Marie?" two voices spoke at once.

"Yes, mother; yes, father, and we are rich—see!" and she emptied her apron on the bed.

How sparkly the gold and silver coin jingled! It was like the echo of a harvest song—the distant echo brought back by summer breezes.

"Bless my little darlings; bless you my angel child," and two hands were laid upon her head, and tears and smiles strangely mixed together.

"What does it mean Therese?" and the mother looked wonderfully at the beautiful little daughter, as the came into the parlor in obedience to a message brought by a servant.

"Monsieur B. says you promised to see him to-night."

"I did, mamma. Did you bring your scissors, sir?" And she received a fourfold in the soft curls which he cut, and quickly counted out his fee.

"Fourteen dollars," and he took from his pocket a shining pair.

"Therese! what means this?" The mother spoke sternly.

"I have sold my hair to him, mamma, and he has come to cut it off."

"Child your behaviour is offensive; you accept—are you not married?" and the gold-and her to her side and laid her hands protectingly on her peerless curls.

"I'll tell her dear it was, sir. She won't be angry then.

She did so.

Closer and closer to her heart was the child drawn by the troubled mother, as the narrative proceeded with its touching story. And when finished, she sweeped her head with kisses, and called her a darling, a pet, an angel, a blessing, a little queen, "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

A single tear was removed from the beautiful head that night; one long, soft, golden curl, which the hair dresser carefully placed in a reverently he thought it laid hands upon Queen Rose an angel's robe. On the queen-rose he laid it covered into a heart's core, and the strong, abiding, human power was free afterward were next his heart—a talisman against haunting sins.

COMING EVENTS.

HOSTILITY TO THE JEWS, IN LITHUANIA.

Authentic letters from Wilna, which have reached the metropolis, give a detailed account of an awful calamity which has befallen the Jews of a whole district in the government of Kowno. The particulars are these:—Last January a little peasant girl, of the village of Seborskoe, was missed. Suddenly the report was spread that the child had been kidnapped by the Jews, in order to make use of its blood in the Passover ceremonies. A judicial inquiry was at once instituted, the house of the neighbouring Jews were thoroughly searched, but no trace of the girl could be discovered. A month afterwards her body was found under a large mass of snow which had begun to melt. The village priest then preached in the church that the Jews, after having drawn the blood from the child had buried the corpse in the snow. The proprietor of the estate, equalling the priest in fanaticism, made the same assertion. The excitement of the peasantry against the unfortunate Jews thus spread farther daily, and at last [illegible] serious. All intercourse with the Jews of the whole district was cut off, and any Jew that dared to show himself in the street was assailed with hatchets. Moreover, the [illegible] was into prison, there to await their trial as murderers. As is usual at such times of excitement an informer, who had witnessed all the proceedings, at the alleged crime was not wanting. A worthless individual, a Jew by birth and a thief by profession, who had just been discharged from gaol, came forward stating that he was present when the Jews slaughtered the girl, and caught up her blood, and even named all the individuals who participated in the atrocity. When this terrible news reached Wilna, the capital of the province, the Gov- [illegible] Nalumow, a truly humane and [illegible] gentleman, at once despatched Count Tolstoi, accompanied by an intelligent Hebrew, to the spot, in order to inquire into the affair, and there can be no doubt but the Russian authorities will thoroughly sift the matter. But the course of justice is naturally slow, the conspiracy against the Jews wide spread, and the rage of the peasants ungovernable. The sufferings of the Jews at this moment from popular fanaticism, are truly awful. Nothing but the prompt and efficient protection of the government can save them from impending destruction.—Jewish Chronicle.

A LABRADOR MISSIONARY.

Mr. Noble, in "After Icebergs with a Painter," describes a very interesting character he met in Newfoundland. A chat with a man who had known Southey, Lamb and Coleridge, away up in the northeast, among the fogs of the New World, must have been doubly interesting from the remoteness of the locale.

We closed the day with the consul, who invited to join to the Rev. George Hutchinson, a nephew of the poet Wordsworth, and necessitated in his youthful days to see at his uncle's such literary worthies as Lamb and Southey. He talked much of Hartley Coleridge, of whose abilities he had a high opinion. Southey, of all [illegible] admiration. He was, all in all, indeed a wonderful man; a perfect Herculus in literary labors. A few years ago, Mr. Hutchinson, moved by a religious spirit, was induced to give up a pleasant living in Devonshire, cross the Mistova Hills, and devote himself to the toils and privations of a missionary in Labrador. Upon the death of his mother he went home, over a year ago, and became possessed of a small property. He has returned recently, and is now waiting for an opportunity to go back to Labrador. This meeting and conversation with the Rev. George Hutchinson, has turned out to be of more than ordinary interest. C—— has determined to hire a vessel for a month, and not the missionary down in the midst of his people, without further trouble. We retired, pleasantly excited with visions of icebergs and northern coast scenery, and with thoughts of preparation for the voyage.

A ROVING LIFE.

At Bow-street Police Office on Saturday an elderly man of gentlemanly appearance and address, who stated that his name was Oxley, applied to the magistrate under the following circumstances: He got into the Royal Artillery School at Woolwich by the influence of the late Duke of York, and served as an officer of Artillery for twenty-one years. Government offered at that time what was called a "bonus" to officers who had served for a certain number of years. This was the permission to sell their commissions and the grant of a piece of land in Canada. He accepted the offer, and when he went out to Canada he found that his property was fifteen miles from any human habitation; that the road to it lay for the greater part of the year under three or four feet of snow; and that the land itself was perfectly useless to him, being so covered with timber that it would require an enormous capital to clear it. He then became manager and editor of the Ottawa Advertiser newspaper, after which he removed to the Ottawa School, and became Professor of mathematics and Military Tactics at Sussex Island College. Subsequently he entered the New York Prisoners for Debt prison, and came recently to London as editor of a newspaper at New Orleans. But when the recent disturbances broke out he was required to take an oath of allegiance to the new Southern (Secession) Confederacy, and to abjure his own country—[illegible] he refused. He then, finding that several persons who had expressed his sentiments had been [illegible] by members of [illegible] determined to leave the country, and [illegible] [illegible] Mississippi, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Chamber suspended its sitting for three days.

The President said:—We feel deeply affected by the misfortune that has deprived us of the wisdom of our Sovereign's counsels. We make not, however, a bitter comment on the discouragements and the public check we hitherto followed. His supreme regret expressed in his last moments, the unshaken faith in the future of Italy, showing himself convinced that the principle of unity and independence would finally triumph. We firmly hold this faith, expressing among ourselves. Let us fervently rally around the throne of a gallant and Prince, and we shall be then able to attain the end to which, thanks to our tenacity, we are happily so near.

In Peterboro, on the 14th inst., the wife of Mr. John Lamb of a son.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE County of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

I have been urgently solicited by those representing a large section of the Electors of the County, to become a Candidate at the forthcoming election. I have consented to do so.

I come forward deeply impressed with the responsibility that will attach to any one chosen to represent you at this period of the history of Canada, and I should shrink from the risk of incurring it, had I not learnt that all necessary wisdom is imparted to those who seek it from the Allwise Director of all hearts.

Not having the advantage of a long residence amongst you, it is necessary for me to state briefly my political opinions.

Having borne a Commission in Her Majesty's Service for upwards of 21 years, I need scarcely say that I have imbibed a strong attachment to the British crown and country, and a love of honor, order, and justice.

The former would lead me to resist to the uttermost any attempts of any party to dissever or weaken our connection with the mother country, and the latter would induce me to render justice to all parties and all creeds, and confine my efforts to obtain justice within lawful and constitutional limits.

As regards the prominent questions now before the country, I feel that no ambiguity should be used in expressing my views.

I think it is injustice that Upper Canada should be ruled by a small minority of her representatives, and every constitutional means should be employed to remove this injustice, without inflicting a like injustice on the Eastern section.

Representation by population appears to me common justice to the superiority in numbers and wealth of Upper Canada, and would tend to give us our fair weight in the United Legislature.

I would vote, therefore, for that measure, and wish to see removed from power those who now oppose it.

I wish to see an immediate and complete operation between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway, and should vote that no further aid be given it from the public treasury. Also, that no person connected with the Government of the country should be employed, or hold any official position in its management.

As regards the public finances, I would allow of no excess of expenditure over income, and would retain all disbursements as much as possible in the hands of Parliament.

The fundamental principles of political morality demand that no Minister of the Crown should take advantage of his position to enrich himself by pecuniary contracts, and I sincerely hope to see the day when this evil transgression will meet with the condemnation they merit.

Should I be favored as your representative, I need scarcely say that the interests of [illegible] will be my constant care, and I shall [illegible] to have held a [illegible] with the Constituency to hear and to [illegible] of the people.

A more detailed statement of my views [illegible].

I shall [illegible] the overtures of friends, [illegible] to solicit the support of those [illegible] in this the County.

I have, Gentlemen,
Your faithful servant,
FRED. W. HAULTAIN.

V[illegible]

An [illegible] was brought out in the State of New York about five years since for pulverizing the land and covering seed called [illegible] Cruiser's Harrow," for which many [illegible] advantages were claimed, it was extensively advertised and had a large sale for a year or two. Notwithstanding all that has been written about it I have never been able to get a good description of it, but I have been at some trouble to ascertain by correspondence, the opinion of several parties who have tried it, and from what I have learned I am inclined to think that its excellencies appear to smash the best advantage on paper. I have long been of the opinion that a [illegible] plow would be an effectual instrument for covering seed, while it would in many cases serve the purpose of a plow. It appears to me that land which has lain some length of time after plowing would be greatly benefited by the operation of some implement that would loosen and stir the soil to a greater depth than can be done by the common harrow or anything else that has yet been used for the purpose. Take for example stubble land that has been plowed the previous fall, and on which we wish to sow spring crop, it is not generally desirable to plow again to the same depth, because the stubble, grass, &c., which were inverted by the plow are not yet sufficiently rotted to be again brought to the surface, and yet something more than ordinary harrowing is required to pulverize and mix the nutritive elements of the soil which have become disintegrated by exposure to the winter frost. A good gang plow that would run about three or ten deep and turn three or four furrows of six inches wide each, would answer all the purposes of plowing without turning up the unrotted material, while it would cover the seed at the same time. [illegible] harrowing the whole labor is done at once. Such an implement could easily be drawn by one span of horses, as four furrows three by six inches would not require more draught than one furrow [illegible] A [illegible] gang with some three gangs per day and I am accomplish as much work as the [illegible] mode, and I think in a much superior manner.

Having said this much on the subject of sowing and harrowing generally let us briefly reveal to the same operation in regard to the different crops. First, of Wheat: this kind of preparation for this crop is either now [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] manner [illegible] [illegible] have practiced the last plowing of Fall two weeks previous to the time of sowing, in order to give the seeds of any useful weeds that may be contained in the soil an opportunity to vegitate that they may be destroyed by the operation of covering the seed. Many preparations have been used for the seed to prevent smut and to cause the seed to germinate quickly, the best [illegible] to lay of wood ashes. If the [illegible] perfectly clean—that is if it contains [illegible] any smut or other impurity—it will require to be washed. To do this take a tub or box that will hold about one or one and a-half bushels, fill it half full of wheat, then fill with water, stir the wheat well and pour off the water, repeat the operation until the water comes off clear, then lay it in a heap on the barn floor, let it remain until it has become so dry that it will not stick together in turning over, then lime the all the grains may come in contact with the ley; never put lime unless or plaster in to dry it, if is only a nuisance in sowing, it will be sufficiently dry in an hour without any application. Fall wheat should be sown not later than the first week in September to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] situations [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Ayer's Sarsaparilla!

Poetry.

"WHAT THEY SAY."

Wouldst thou know what troubles many,
What annoys some night and day,
Not a frightful myth or robber,
But the spectre "What they say."

"What they say?" It haunts the maiden
When her hat or dress she buys,
Goads the matron till she maketh
Husband's purse a sacrifice.

To the orator it clingeth,
Haunts the statesman in his dream,
With the pulpit teacher stealeth
'Tween him and his highest theme.

"What they say?" Well, let them say it
Airy echo, fleet as dew,
When they're said it 'tis forgotten,
They who hear forget it too.

Wouldst thou know what rules the million?
Themis, with her ancient sway?
Pomp and tramp of mannered legions?
No,—the bubble "What they say."

A RACE FOR LIFE.

While on our way to McGregor the other day, on the steamer Milwaukee, we made the acquaintance of one of our fellow-passengers, who had just escaped from the Southern Confederacy. Many of our citizens knew him well, as he was once in business here. We will give the narrative in his own words as near as possible:

"You see I had been in a heavy wholesale and retail provision business in the city of Augusta, Georgia, for two years, and was getting along with the inhabitants very smoothly, until a little circumstance transpired last fall which incited the populace against me. I had taken more or less interest in political affairs while I lived here, and, as much from policy as anything else, adopted a Conservative Southern view of matters. I was a strong Bell and Everett man, and when the State Convention was in Session, I was mentioned as one of the state electors.

As it was known that I came from Dubuque, some of my constituents wrote to the latter city for information as to my political antecedents. The letter was addressed to one of the prominent law firms of Dubuque, and for some unaccountable reason answered in such a manner as to direct the deepest indignation of the community where I lived against me. They were informed that I was a loud-mouthed Abolitionist, and stumped the state for Fremont. Within a short time of the receipt of that letter, my house was surrounded by an infuriated mob, eager to wreak a blind vengeance on me.—I appealed to the Mayor, who was a warm personal friend of mine, for protection. He responded by calling out the entire police force to disperse the rabble.

Myself and son-in-law stood all that night at the head of the first flight of stairs, in my house, with fire-arms and axes, resolved to sell our lives as dearly as possible, should the miscreant break in. My brave wife knew no fear, and would not leave my side although I entreated her to do so. She seemed nerved to desperation by our common danger, and ready to face all, and ready to sacrifice her life, if necessary, in defence of our home.

The people were pacified at last when they found us too resolute to be imposed on and after a short time I was allowed to pursue my business as usual. I satisfied them apparently that I did not entertain principles repugnant to their peculiar views, and convinced them that the information they had received was a tissue of falsehoods; yet there ever lurked among them a suspicion of my loyalty to the South. Thus we lived through the winter, the community becoming more excited and bitter to those who did not coincide to the letter with the damnable opinions that then ruled the hour.

In illustration of this I will only cite one instance:

A party of merchants were discussing the impending crisis one afternoon in a store not far from mine when one of my neighbors made the following remark, "Gentlemen, we must be careful and not underrate the strength of the enemy." That same night a committee called upon him and asked him if he made such a remark, when he replied, "Yes, and I do not see the harm in it. It is one of the first lessons in military strategy not to underrate the power of the enemy." His explanation availed him nothing. He was seized and one side of his head and face shaved clear of the hair and whiskers. Then the newly barbered portions were daubed with tar and feathers.—He then received forty lashes, and was given to understand that he had 12 hours in which to make himself scarce.

This was not an isolated instance. Deeds of violence were of daily occurrence, and many times they resulted in the death of the victim. With such a state of society boiling around me, I naturally felt anxious to remove my family beyond all chances of injury. Finally, when they had been for some time drafting troops from the city for Jeff. Davis's army, I foresaw the time when I would be called on, and determined to remove my wife and children to the North. I started off with them, ostensibly to go to another place, and took them to Atlanta, where I bought through tickets for them and sent them on forward, while I returned to Augusta to close up my business.

I continued in my trade there for a short time, endeavouring to convert my property into funds which would be current in Iowa. I dared not purchase gold at the banks myself, for fear of attracting the attention of the Vigilance Committee. No one was allowed to leave the country openly.—Through the friendship of a young man named Powers, who had been boarding with me, I purchased some current funds, perhaps $400. He was a bookseller from Ohio who had been selling a work entitled "Cotton is King," and was not suspected of fostering liberal sentiments. It was through his services and friendship mainly that I escaped.

One afternoon an Orderly Sergeant came into my counting-room, and informed me it would be necessary, in accordance with a recent requisition from Montgomery, for me to enlist. I saw it would not do to hesitate an instant, and therefore manifested great readiness and even eagerness to join. I was told I could have my choice between infantry and cavalry, and I must meet my comrades that night at the armory. I chose to join the cavalry, and at the appointed hour was on hand to enroll my name. I was very zealous apparently in my wishes to fight the Abolitionists, and by skillfully guarding my speech led my comrades to believe I was the best secessionist of them all, and the Sergeant presented me with one of Colt's navy revolvers, which had been stolen from the United States. I requested him to load it for me, as I was not posted on that sort of thing. He did so. These five charges are still in the barrel, and so help me, they shall never be fired off until they are discharged in the streets of Augusta, and one of them into the body of the Sergeant who loaded it.

I got away from the armory and hurried home, where I found Powers making preparations to go North by the next train, which left at half-past ten that night. I told him I must get away from Augusta that night at any cost. I asked him to take my carpet-bag on board the train, and if I did not call for it at a certain time, to send it to my family in Dubuque. He said he would do so.

I locked up my store and house—the one completely furnished from top to bottom, and the other containing $9,000 worth of goods, which I was obliged to leave behind to fall into the hands of the rebels.

I then repaired to the depot nearly an hour before the time for the departure of the train, and secreted myself under the rear platform of the rear car, on a crosspiece which connected the wheels. Grasping my pistol in my hand and resolving to shoot the first man who discovered me, I waited for events.

Soon after I had gained this position, the Vigilance Committee came into the depot. They were a party of men appointed to see that no Northern man went away on the train, and to exercise a general surveillance over all suspicious characters. If they discovered a Northern man, he was taken out, whipped, and forced to enlist. If they found one who had enlisted already, it fared worse for him. He was whipped and otherwise maltreated, and then not unusually shot, so I knew what my fate would be if detected. As the hour for starting drew near, my suspense was agonizing in the extreme. Finally a little incident occurred which probably insured my salvation from their clutches. The committee went through the cars after the passengers were seated, and closely questioned and scrutinized every individual. In one car they found an old man who answered to the description of a man who had been tarred and feathered at Savannah and shipped off. Appended to the despatch, describing him, was this Christian injunction, "If you catch him, give him hell."

One of the ruffians lifted his gray locks and saw the tar still adhering to his brow, where he had been unable to remove it.—He fairly yelled with delight. "Here's the old devil! Now we've got him!" etc.—They then dragged him from the car to the platform outside, although they did not know of a thing he had done amiss.

"Gentleman," said the aged man respectfully, "I am an old man, and do not know that I ever did any man any wrong. All that I ask is the privilege of getting home to my family. I beg that you will release me."

They laughed his entreaties to scorn, and bore him away in the dark, screaming and yelling like demons, doubtless to torture him with scourges, and perhaps to murder him as they have so many before him.

During all this time I lay within a dozen feet of some of the party, expecting every moment I would be discovered by some unlucky fiend. It was well for him and me that he did not, for that would have been the signal for his death. I would have shot as many as I could and died dearly.

At last the train moved out of the depot slowly around a curve, and when it was out of the range of the depot lamps, I dropped from my perch and clambered upon the rear platform of the car. Going into the car, I sat down in the darkest corner and drew my hat over my face in order to escape recognition. By feigning sleep I escaped the attention and remarks of my townsmen, many of whom were on board the train, until morning, when we reached Atlanta, some 200 miles from Augusta.—If I could get beyond there I knew I was comparatively safe, as there was no telegraph between that place and Chattanooga though there was one from Augusta to Atlanta.

It was daylight when we left Atlanta, so that further concealment was impossible.—My fellow-passengers expressed considerable surprise at seeing me, and were anxious to know where I was going. I informed them that I was going to Chattanooga as usual, to purchase a large quantity of bacon in which I was dealing extensively. Many of my acquaintances whom I knew to be in the same business, were also going after beef, pork, flour, grain, and such other provisions as we were forced to purchase in the Northern States.

There were five of us all going for provisions. At last we arrived in Louisville, but found to our disappointment [!] that instruments were so small for buying there that the only alternative left was to go to the great fountain-head at Cincinnati and buy what we wanted. We all went across the river into Indiana, every soul of us, and got aboard the cars at Cincinnati.

Just before the train was to start, an old man arose and made this remark: "Gentlemen, I don't know how you all feel, but I thank God I am on free soil once more." Oh! you should have heard the shout that then went up. Every man of us here knew flowing from the Southern Confederacy! and dared not screw it to such utterance. We all got out of the cars again, on the platform, and there refreshed our throats with three loud cheers for FREEDOM."

The £1,500 Affair.

Judgment of Chancellor Blake.

[At the request of many we again lay before our readers the concluding part of the Judgment of Chancellor Blake. As our desire is that the public may thoroughly understand the case, we give Mr. Conger the benefit of Mr. Esten's judgment in full.]

Upon the whole I am of opinion that the statements of the Bill upon this point have been distinctly proved. It has been shown to my satisfaction that the defendant Conger stated to the Municipal Council of the Town of Peterboro, or led them to believe in the words of the Bill "that about £1,500 would have to be paid to the Municipality which had or was entitled to the M. L. fund debentures for interest and payments towards the sinking fund, which the said Municipality had paid or was liable to pay to the Government." And I believe that the defendant Conger obtained authority from the Council to treat with the Municipality which held, or was entitled to such debentures upon the terms of paying to, or for the said Municipality the said interest and sinking fund account which said Municipality had paid or was liable to pay to the Government.

The next question is, did Conger enter into this contract with Whitmarsh in the belief that £1,500 was due to the Government? or did he enter into it with a full knowledge that nothing whatever was due to the Government, and that the contract was a fraudulent and illegal contract, either for the benefit of Whitmarsh alone, if Conger's statement is to be believed, or for their joint benefit if the account given by Whitmarsh can be trusted.

☞ The statement that Conger entered into this contract in the belief that £1,500 was due to the Government for interest, &c., must be admitted, I think, to be highly improbable. ☜ IT IS CLEAR THAT NOTHING WHATEVER WAS DUE TO THE GOVERNMENT FOR INTEREST. The Act provides that the coupons are to be taken by the Receiver General as cash. These debentures had never been issued as everybody knows. Some of the coupons had been returned to the Receiver General and were credited as cash in the account furnished to the Township of Wolford in January, 1857, and the residue were then ready to be returned. It is clear therefore that nothing was due for interest, and did this gentleman, complimented so highly for his interest and energy, remain ignorant of a fact so patent?

But when we shall have traced this matter through all its windings, what was at first sight improbable will be found in the end incredible.

* * * On the 10th of October, that is, on the second day after the letter to which I have referred, had been received, the township of Wolford passed a resolution authorizing Whitmarsh to return the debentures, and on the 12th of October, that is, on the second day after the township of Wolford had adopted that resolution, Conger appeared before the Municipal Council of the Town of Peterboro, made his statement, and was authorized to negotiate for the transfer of these debentures, and the question is, did he take that step in ignorance of the Receiver General to Whitmarsh, and of the resolution adopted by the municipality of Wolford, or with a knowledge of everything that passed.

On the 25th of November, the By-law passed by the Town Council of Peterboro' was approved by his Excellency in Council. On the 25th of November, a minute of the Executive Council by which the Township of Wolford was discharged from all liability in relation to the debentures which had been issued to them, was approved by his Excellency, and on the same day Whitmarsh was informed of the fact by a letter from the Receiver-General, and the new debentures were issued to Conger. Was Conger, by whose interest and energy all this had been brought about, ignorant of the contents of this Minute of Council?

But what passed when the money is said to have been paid to Whitmarsh is to my mind conclusive. Take Conger's own account. He says, that having paid Whitmarsh the £1351 5s, Whitmarsh handed him back about £70 (it was £68 18s 8d, I have no doubt), with a request that he would pay it to the Receiver-General.—Did Conger know, or did he not, that this was the amount charged by Government against the holders of the debentures as their proportionate share of the expense of keeping the M. L. F. Account? Did Conger know, or did he not, that this was the whole amount claimed by Government in relation to those debentures? Upon that point, I cannot say that I entertain the slightest doubt. I believe that the letter of the Receiver-General of the 8th of Oct. was communicated to Conger, and from that time, at least, the intention of the Government was as well known to Conger as to Whitmarsh.

Assuming the facts to be as I have stated the question is, have those defendants, or either of them, any defence to this suit?—And I am clearly of opinion that they have not. When the debentures came into the hands of the defendant Conger, they were unquestionably the property of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs having been led to the belief, that debentures, the property of none other municipality, were to be transferred to them, authorized their agent to pay off a sum which was represented to be a charge upon the debentures to be transferred. But no such debentures were ever transferred to the plaintiffs, and there was in reality no charge to be paid off. The old debentures were surrendered at the request of the holders, who made no claim against the plaintiffs, and new debentures were issued, upon which no legal claim of any sort existed. Three of these debentures, then the undoubted property of the plaintiffs, were sold by the defendant Conger, and the proceeds were either paid over to the other defendant Whitmarsh, or they were divided between them upon an unfair and fraudulent arrangement which was fraudulent and void as against every person connected with the transaction.—IT WAS A PLAIN FRAUD UPON THE TOWNSHIP OF WOLFORD. Whitmarsh, who was their agent, was disabled from trafficking with their property for his own benefit, and it is admitted that he cannot be permitted to retain one shilling of the money which has got into his hands. IT WAS A GROSS FRAUD UPON THE GOVERNMENT, who consented to the exchange of these debentures not for the benefit of the defendants or either of them, but as depositaries of a great public trust, and with an exclusive view to the public interest. ☞ Had they known that the intention of the persons who solicited the exchange was to take £1,500 out of the pockets of the Plaintiffs to whom these debentures were issued without charge for public purposes and to place it in the pockets of the defendants themselves upon an underhand and illegal agreement they would have spurned the agreement with indignation, and it was a gross fraud upon the Plaintiffs also as I have already shewn. ☜ Had there been nothing further in the case, therefore, I should have thought the Plaintiffs entitled to a decree against both defendants.

Assuming that view to be correct, it would be unnecessary to enquire how the funds were dealt with; but it may not be useless to advert briefly to that point. IT WILL BE SEEN THAT BOTH DEFENDANTS HAD AN INTEREST IN DENYING AN AGREEMENT TO DIVIDE THE FUND. To have admitted an agreement to divide the fund would have been to confess the plaintiff's right to a decree. An agreement therefore to divide the fund is therefore negatived by both. But agreeing in this they differ widely as to the virtual disposition of it, Conger swears that the whole was paid to Whitmarsh, Whitmarsh swears that he only received £745, which is, I may remark, within a fraction of the half—after deducting £68 18s. 8d. due to government. The precise amount would have been, had an equal division been intended, £744 8s 2d, where the contradiction is so complete, it becomes of course difficult to decide. ☞ But I incline on the whole to agree with Whitmarsh. I do so, first, because his evidence appears to me more truthful than Conger's, SOME OF WHOSE STATEMENTS ARE PLAINLY IRRECONCILABLE, as it seems to me, with truth. I do not know the precise date, at which his answer was sworn to, but as the Bill was filed on the 21st of August, 1858, it must, of course, have been subsequent to that.—Now, can it be doubted that at that period at all events, ☞ Conger knew that nothing was due to the Government by the Township of Wolford, that the Government had cancelled the debentures and absolved them from all liabilities? In one sense of the term he may not have known it, but in another sense—the sense in which the term should have been used in the answer, I do now know, and every one who hears me knows, ☞ and the defendant when he swore to his answer must have known. ☜ that nothing was due to the Government upon the cancelled debentures, that Wolford had been discharged from all liability. Yet in the passage in his answer, to which I have already referred Conger SWEARS "And I say I know not whether the said sum of £1,500 sterling was in reality due to the Government." ☞ This is in my opinion a WILLFUL UNTRUTH. ☜ I am disposed to think Whitmarsh's statement to be true upon this ground, also that a perfectly good understanding appears to have subsisted between the parties down to a very late period for which I cannot otherwise account. Had Conger been the dupe of Whitmarsh, as he represents, some little resentment would have been felt, I think, and expressed, when his honesty in relation to the matter was called in question by his fellow townsmen. But I have failed to find any trace of such a feeling. On the contrary, when Whitmarsh became involved with his Municipality, Conger comes to his rescue, and so late as September 1858, he makes a proposition to Whitmarsh for a joint defence. But it is said that Conger's evidence is confirmed by Whitmarsh's receipt. But I am inclined to think that the document in question was given for a purpose. It was necessary to the protection of both parties as they understood their position, and it was so used; when Conger fell under suspicion he produced the receipt and insisted that if anything were wrong the fault lay with Whitmarsh. And when Whitmarsh's conduct was impugned, Conger writes, "In reference to the receipt for the money paid you, I perceive that it is given in your private capacity."

Upon the whole, I am inclined to the opinion that Whitmarsh has stated the truth; and if that be so, the Plaintiffs' right to a Decree is of course apparent. But without considering into whose pocket the money passed, I am of opinion that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a Decree against both, with costs.

Judgment of Vice-Chancellor Esten.

This suit is brought by the Corporation of the Town of Peterboro', against two persons of the names of Conger and Whitmarsh respectively. The case made by the Bill, is, that the Town of Peterborough being in want of a sum of money to aid in the construction of a Branch Railway, Mr. Conger, who was a member of the Town Council, stated at one of the meetings that £25,000 of Municipal Loan Fund Debentures could be procured from a Municipality which was desirous of being relieved from them, on terms of being secured against all liability on account of them, and thereupon he was authorized to procure them on those terms. That accordingly, he agreed with Whitmarsh, who held the Debentures on behalf of the Municipality of Wolford, to receive them on these terms; that thereupon they were surrendered to the Government, which issued new Debentures to the Town of Peterboro', and delivered them to Conger for its use, but that Conger and Whitmarsh retained the proceeds of three of these Debentures, amounting to £1,500 and upwards, amounting to £1,500 and upwards, the amount claimed by Government being only £75, or thereabouts, for their own use, or for the use of themselves, and some other person or persons to the Plaintiff unknown and by collision with them.

Now this case wholly fails in evidence. The fact was, that Conger, having stated that £1,500 must be paid for the Debentures, was authorised to obtain them on those terms, the Council thinking that that amount was due to the Government for arrears of interest and expenses, but being willing to pay it for the Debentures whether it was or not, their own debentures being unsaleable, and Municipal Loan Fund Debentures for which there was a ready sale, being obtainable only through the medium of transfer from some other Municipality which had received them, the Government being determined to issue no more of them. Conger in pursuance of this authority concluded a bargain with Whitmarsh for obtaining these Debentures on payment of £1500, which sum Whitmarsh refused to abate.—The course adopted was to surrender the Debentures already issued and issue new Debentures to Peterboro' which was to pay the £75 claimed by Government.

Now the question is, not whether it was very proper for two Municipalities to deal with Government securities in this way, but whether the Town of Peterborough having sanctioned such a transaction and having authorised their Agent to pay £1,500 for the acquisition of these Debentures, when he has strictly followed their instructions and paid that amount out of the Debentures, can complain of his having acted in obedience to their orders and make him accountable for the sum so paid. It is true that if Mr. Conger retained any part of the £1,500 in his own hands and did not pay the whole of it to Mr. Whitmarsh, he would be accountable to his principals for that amount so retained, and this raises the question, whether he did in fact retain any part of the £1,500, or whether he paid the whole of it to Mr. Whitmarsh; on this point the evidence of these two parties is diametrically opposed. Conger solemnly asserting that he paid the whole to Whitmarsh, and Whitmarsh affirming that he received from Conger only about £740.

Upon this question I may observe that Mr. Whitmarsh, here only does not appear to think that Conger retained any part of the money for his own use, that by his own shewing he signed the receipt which he gave to Conger for the whole amount without reading it, that after having refused all abatement of the sum of £1,500 on the price of the Debentures at the time of the bargain, he afterwards accepted less than half that amount, without remonstrance or inquiry, although he knew that the Government had remitted all demands except about £75; say that this very £75 Whitmarsh handed to Conger out of the £740 paid to him for transmission to the Government; these circumstances are all extremely singular. In the whole course of my professional experience and reading I do not recollect an instance of such flat contradiction between witnesses apparently so respectable.

Without deciding this question, I am satisfied that the evidence is wholly insufficient to shew that Mr. Conger either retained any part of this money for his own use or applied it to any purpose not authorised by his instructions, and my Brother Spragge who heard these two gentlemen deliver their evidence, is of the same opinion. It is said Mr. Conger represented to the Council that the sum of £1,500 was due for arrears of interest and expenses to the Government when he knew the contrary to be the fact. After an attentive perusal of the evidence, I think it shews that Conger made no such representation as is imputed to him.

He stated plainly that £1,500 must be paid for the Debentures, and when asked what it was for, he replied that the Debentures had been issued some time and he presumed that a considerable amount of arrears of interest must have accrued due; and one witness states that he added, that they need not entertain the idea that the Government would forge it. There is nothing to shew that Mr. Conger did not believe these statements to be true. It is said that Mr. Conger must have known when he received the £75 from Whitmarsh for transmission to the Government, if he did not know before, that all claims had been remitted by he Government, in respect of the Debentures, excepting a small amount. Supposing this to be the case, was it Conger's duty to act otherwise than he did—I mean his duty to his principals. At this time the bargain had been concluded with Whitmarsh, and he had acted upon it to the extent of surrendering the Debentures which he held to the Government so that he could not be placed in statu quo, and loss incurred would it have been to Mr. Conger and the Plaintiff's to have withdrawn from their bargain under such circumstances. My view of the facts of the case is, that the Plaintiffs were perfectly willing and anxious to pay the £1,500 for the Debentures rather than not have them, even although was due or claimed by the Government and that they authorised Mr. Conger to obtain them on those terms if no better could be had, but that some of the members of the Council being desirous to know why that or any sum should be paid, Mr. Conger suggested that the Debentures had been issued some time, and that probably a large amount was due for arrears of interest and expenses, believing such to be the fact, and that the Council were satisfied with this explanation and authorised Conger to conclude the bargain for payment of the £1,500 whether that or any amount was due or not. It is said however that Conger must have known that nothing was due to the Government, because so long as the debentures remained in the hands of the Municipality the Government were bound to receive the Coupons in satisfaction of the interest. But why should Conger know more than other members of the Council? Either Conger did not know more than they did, and therefore was guilty of no misrepresentations, or they knew as much as he did, and therefore the misrepresentations was addressed to parties who knew it to be such, and therefore were not deceived. In truth I think none of them thought of the provision of the statute for it was remarked after the new debentures had been issued some time, that as they were new debentures no interest could be due on them, which showed that it was thought interest might be due on the old ones. Even if Conger were authorised only to bargain for the Debentures on the terms of simply indemnifying the municipality which held them, and without retaining any of the proceeds himself, paid £1,500 to Whitmarsh in order to obtain them, and thereby exceeded his authority, I do not his could be made liable to the Plaintiff for the £1,500 in the way proposed; for it is quite certain they could not be obtained on any other terms. Nor in the grasping case of Mr. Conger knowingly misrepresenting the facts of arrears being due to government, and thereby obtaining authority to purchase the debentures for £1,500, and actually paying that whole amount in order to obtain them, could he in my judgement be made accountable to the plaintiff for that amount for the same reason. The £1,500 would not be the measure of damages in either of these cases for if the authority had not been exceeded, or the misrepresentation made, the plaintiff would not have obtained the debentures at all, and in these cases I think the Court would have left them to their legal remedy against their agent for breach of duty. In the case of the authority being exceeded, the proper remedy would be to rescind the contract as not binding; but that under the circumstances would be plainly impossible, because the parties could not be placed in statu quo. I need not say that neither of these supposed cases is sustained by the evidence. Ought Mr. Conger to have declared to the Council first the name of the individual with whom he was dealing, and afterward that of the Municipality which owned the debentures, so as to enable the council to apply to the municipality, which if they had done they might have obtained the debentures on more favorable terms. This conduct would have been dishonorable towards Mr Whitmarsh, who no doubt dealt with Mr. Conger in confidence, but I think no obligation of the kind existed on Conger's part, because he openly declined to name either the individual or the municipality, and the council, without insisting on such disclosure, authorised him to make the bargain which he did make.—The bill in the cause, and the learned and able judgment of the Chancellor, treat the case on the clear principle of the new debentures, being the property of the Plaintiff, and their agent, in collusion with Whitmarsh and others, subscribing and retaining for their own use a portion of this trust property. In such a case I agree that the agent and those colluding with him would be clearly liable; but I do not think the evidence sustains this case in point of fact. The only other case in which, as it seems to me, Mr Conger could be made liable to the extent and in the way proposed by this bill would be the case of his having retained part of the money in his hand, but this fact the evidence I think wholly fails to establish. Mr Whitmarsh is not, I think, under the circumstances of the case, as I consider them to be proved by the evidence accountable to the Plaintiff at all. No privity whatever existed between them.—He dealt with their agent at arms length, and if he is accountable to any one, it is to his own municipality. In conclusion I must reiterate that the question is not whether the transaction I have been canvassing can be justified on public grounds, but whether the Plaintiff, Conger and Whitmarsh, having been justly concerned in a transaction which, in a public point of view, may be of questionable propriety, one or two of them parties can be made liable to the other for their or his share of the transaction. I think this bill must be dismissed with costs.

A newsboy of Cincinnati having got stuck on his stock of papers, cried lustily: "Kre's yer mornin' papers—all about Jeff. Davis' being hung—only three cents." A victim remonstrated with him on the deception, whereupon the youngster remarked: "If Jeff. Davis' been hung, I'd sold all my papers afore ex o'clock this morning, and yer wouldn't get it for three cents either."—Cincinnati Commercial.

AN UNLUCKY REFERENCE TO HISTORY.

The New York papers, with an ignorance of American history which would be very reprehensible if it were not so very absurd, have invited a comparison of the action of the United States Government in regard to the Rebellion in Canada in 1837-38, with the action of the British Government in regard to the Southern Rebellion now in full course. We should have been inclined to let bygones be bygones, and to have buried in oblivion all the international disputes of the past; but we cannot allow the confident appeals of the New York papers to history to pass before the world as proof that history sanctions that appeal. There is no better proof of the superiority of the British Government to any tinge of vindictiveness than its instant and candid avowal of neutrality in the present war, and its prompt measures for carrying out that neutrality to the letter, when contrasted with the conduct of the American Government and people in regard to the troubles in Canada twenty-three years ago. The contrast is rendered more striking by the surrender to the United States of the Peerless, a Canadian vessel which had been purchased by the Confederates,—a surrender which, we are informed on American authority, has just been completed by the Canadian Government.

We have no desire to dwell upon a disagreeable chapter of history, and will put a few facts pertinent to the present issue briefly. When the insurrection began in Canada, the American press favoured the "Patriots," and Americans from various quarters hastened to join the rebels. Men were openly recruited in Buffalo without let or hindrance. A thousand men, nine-tenths of whom were Americans, seized Navy Island, in the river Niagara, and were supplied from New York with munitions of war in abundance. They were commanded by an American, Rensselaer Van Rensselaer, a member of one of the oldest families in the State. An American steamer, the Caroline, piratically hoisting British colors, kept up the communication of the rebels—if that is a proper name to apply to an American force—with the American shore. What did the United States Government do in view of these facts? When it found that the assemblage of Americans was so formidable that there was danger that the Union would become involved in a war with Great Britain unless steps were taken to damp the warlike ardour of her citizens, it issued a feeble proclamation commanding the people on the border to abstain from all interference in what it was pleased to call the "contest between portions of the population (of Canada) and the Government." Meantime the Caroline was boarded by the British; those on board who did not resist were quietly put on shore, those who did resist were made prisoners of war; the vessel was burned, and it drifted over the Falls.—Though the Caroline was openly and notoriously a piratical craft, and every man on board deserved hanging, a great outcry was made throughout this country about its seizure, which the United States Government did not discourage. When all this ill blood had been stirred between Canada and the United States, and most of the mischief was done, this Government, after the battle of St. Charles, and when most of the scanty rebel force had taken refuge in Vermont and elsewhere, sent General Scott to the border with a competent force to keep the Americans from violating a neutrality which they had already set at naught; and about the same time it found out that the "portions of the population" of which it had previously spoken, were in fact "insurgents." The press, generally, during the same time designated these insurgents as "Patriots," and never as rebels except with the saving grace of inverted commas. If his tory gives our New York contemporaries any encouragement in their malignant and unscrupulous attacks on the attitude of the British Government towards the Federal Government at this time, they may make the most of it. After studying the part they played in the Canadian affair they may turn their attention to the revolt of Texas from Mexico, during which very fine and very neutral proclamations emanated from Washington, and enlistments for the rebel forces went on with impunity at every convenient place of the Union.—Scottish American Journal.

DEATH OF CAVOUR.

And so Cavour is dead!—Cavour, the mind of Italy, as Garibaldi is its heart, and Victor Emmanuel its right arm; Cavour who twenty years ago planned that political regeneration of Italy, which the courage and fidelity of the House of Sardinia and the good sword of the Hero of Caprera have united to accomplish. Himself of titled family and ample fortune, he made rank and wealth subservient to the advancement of Italy.—Twenty years ago he began to prepare Sardinia for a position among the powers of Europe by developing her industrial resources and encouraging the education of her people. The agricultural and manufacturing interests of the kingdom, stimulated by the example of England, rallied the energies of the people in the way of self-improvement and self-government. In the memorable epoch of 1847, Cavour took the lead in procuring from Charles Albert a liberal Constitution for Sardinia—the only free Constitution of that era which has withstood subsequent changes and convulsions. Under that Constitution Cavour has served his country in various offices of public responsibility. His favorite policy was, by cherishing the industry of nation, by promoting popular education, and by perfecting the organization and discipline of the army, to bring Sardinia up to a point of vitality and strength which should command the respect of Europe, and qualify her to demand the recognition of Italian unity and nationality. His sagacity in sending a Sardinian contingent to the Crimean war, procured for Sardinia a voice in the Congress of Paris, and brought the Italian question fairly before the assembled Powers. He knew how to use Louis Napoleon without succumbing to a foreign despotism. He knew how to give play to Garibaldi without rushing into the chaos of red republicanism. He knew how to thwart the Pope without alienating Catholics from the support of the throne. He knew how to balance conservatism and radicalism, royalty and republicanism, so as to secure for Italy unity and freedom. Though unversed in war, yet to the no less important field of political strategy he was the King's Nestor and the people's Agamemnon.

To human view Cavour was taken away at a most critical time for Italy—just as the question of the secular Papacy and the occupation of Rome has reached this point where it must be settled either by diplomacy or the sword. It may be that Victor Emmanuel, so long under his training, has become so thoroughly imbued with his ideas that he will carry them out to complete success. Even the impetuosity of Garibaldi reconciled itself at length to the patient watchfulness of Cavour. And Ricasoli is at hand to represent the same spirit and tendencies. But our great hope for Italy is that her cause has now risen above men, and that the Providence which has led her thus far in the conflict will crown her with the final victory.

THE LATE JOHN R. CLARK.

(From the Cobourg Sun.)

On Tuesday morning the people of this section were shocked with the intelligence of the decease of John R. Clark, Esq. the Opposition candidate for this riding. Deep was the gloom that pervaded every countenance as the melancholy intelligence passed from one to another, and which was soon sent with the usual speed of evil tidings far and wide over the country. The disease to which he fell a victim was typhus or typhoid fever. It was contracted when he was in Quebec, where he was ill for some time before the close of the session. He had not completely recovered from that attack when he returned home, and many of his friends remarked the feverish expression of his features. But he maintained his usual cheerful spirits, and attended to his business.—On Monday morning the 3d instant, he was seized with what appeared to himself and family as a rheumatic affection of the limbs as he was passing down stairs from his bedroom. He tried to reach a bed, but was unable, and had to be carried to it by his family, from which he never rose by his own strength again. After a few days the nature of the illness began to appear, but his medical advisers, while apprehending danger, were not without hope of his recovery, no fatal symptom presenting itself. About 3 o'clock on Monday evening, he began to sink rapidly, and expired in the presence of his family about half-past nine o'clock.

The deceased had not completed his 47th year, and gave apparent promise of many years of usefulness to his country. He was of a healthy countenance, and looked remarkably young for a man of that age.—Providence has willed that he should die when the star of his worldly prospects was looking the brightest, and his sun has truly gone down at noon. It is hardly necessary to dilate on the many qualities of mind and heart which have endeared him to his numerous friends, and given him a position which we fear no other man can occupy. He had acquired a very liberal instruction, and had stored his mind richly with useful knowledge. His knowledge of human nature was very accurate. Few men exceeded him in this, and to it we must attribute a share of his success as a politician. But it was the great goodness of his generous heart, his unwavering integrity, his firm devotion to truth, that formed the foundation of his widely extended influence. In him was exemplified the power of love. He could not be happy without friends in whom he could confide, and to whom the current of his affections flowed, which passing from the circle of his dear friends and relatives, would fain reach in its course the whole human family. As a consequence, there is hardly another in this county for whom so many friends would do as much disinterested kindness. He was plain, too, in his rebukes of those who had deviated from right, but such was the amiability of his manners that he rarely made an enemy by the exercise of the most difficult duty of true friendship.

He had long served the public in various local capacities, before he was brought forward. In 1851 he contested the county against Mr. Asa Burnham, and though then young, untried and comparatively unknown he came within 24 votes of obtaining his election. At that time also, the great influence of the Government was against him. Many of his friends remember the astonishment with which the public listened to his eloquent and soul-stirring speeches at Coldsprings and other places on that occasion.

In 1854 he was offered the candidature of the East Riding, but declined, owing to sickness in his family. In 1857, he was nominated and defeated Meyers, obtaining a victory without more than $5 expenses to himself, except his time. His Parliamentary record is before the world. His opponents are unable to point to a single vote which was contrary to the good of his country.

In 1860 he received the nearly unanimous vote of Northumberland, at the convention which was held in Grafton, to bring out a candidate for the Legislative Council, and if he had gone to the polls as a candidate it is now conceded, that he would have received an overwhelming majority of votes. He yielded at that time to the desire of a large portion of electors who wished him to retain his position of great usefulness in the Lower House. Before the convention assembled in the East Riding, on Friday last he was brought out as a candidate in opposition to the Postmaster-General who had hurried on his election in his Riding, thinking by such sharp practice to carry his election. Though he had only been five days before the electors as a candidate, it is generally believed that if he had lived till the 29th, he would have beaten Mr. Smith by an overwhelming majority, and this too in the face of the immense patronage of the Government which has been for years directed to neutralize opposition in this Riding, and while at the same time he would have been confined to his bed, unable to take any part in his election. Such a circumstance tells its own tale, and furnishes its own eulogy on his public character.—But, alas! he has gone! His sorrowing friends and bereived family receive the sympathies of a deeply affected community. The discharge of the last and funeral rite remains. On the afternoon of Thursday next, his body will be interred in the Friends burying ground at the south part of the farm, but his redeemed and glorified spirit is we hope and trust, in the land where the malice of enemies cannot reach him, and the fever of political excitement is happily unknown.

THE MODEL REPUBLIC.

Hitherto the Americans have affected to laugh at the effete monarchies of the Old World. On the face of the globe there was no political organization so perfect as their own. John Bull was but a poor, decrepit, drivelling idiot, compelled to doff his hat to Majesty, and tied to the chariot wheels of a "bloated aristocracy." How the poor fellow was fleeced and bamboozled to be sure. In the land of Yankee Doodle, again, things were differently ordered. There every man was as good as another; there the clown, all unwashed and unshorn as he might be, was yet an integral portion of majesty. He doffed his hat to no man. He gave obedience to the laws only so far as it suited himself to do so. He had certain grains of royalty in his composition, and to that extent, and not seldom beyond that extent, he was above all law—could, in fact, do no wrong. Did his fellow sovereign merit his displeasure, he cowhided him, he pistolled him, he lynched him, or he stuck a bowie-knife into his stomach. Bold, dashing fellows, these Yankees! If not altogether without reproach, they were at all events without fear. They were never without a "difficulty" of some kind, either foreign or domestic. They would "lick creation" if necessary; and, whether necessary or not, they would still "lick creation." Under the stars and stripes, people could do what they liked if they were able to do it, and about to incur the risk of being punished by people as superpicious as themselves. American liberty was liberty run mad. It was a something closely akin to ruffianism—the liberty of the highwayman, with whom might is right and possession the only evidence of infallement.

Of all the "difficulties" brother Jonathan ever had on hand the present is undoubtedly the one most calculated to "rile" him. He has had nothing like it ever since he set up in business on his own book. One or two little wars he has had, of which he has made the most, but such a dish of fighting was never previously presented to him as now awaits his mastication. Mighty tough chewing he will find it to be we fear. Foreign enemies are troublesome enough, but a house divided against itself is rather a critical case. When the inhabitants of the kitchen work in unison with those in the parlor the burglar can easily be overpowered and turned out of doors; but when there is internecine war between those two departments of the domicile, thieves and robbers have a thriving time of it. So long as the Northern and Southern States pulled together in harmony, they had little to fear from external foes; but having come to daggers-drawing with each other, neither of them will henceforth be a terror to "creation." Even Spain has comprehended the nature of the situation, and has brought about a coup in St. Domingo, which she would never have dared to dream of had Jonathan been all right. We simply note the fact, without applauding Spain for the deed.—Still, if St. Domingo must be swallowed up it is better that Spain should put it into her maw than that it should become the prey of the Confederate States.

We wonder if our Yankee friends still repose the same implicit confidence in the superiority of their own democratic institutions over the old European monarchies as they professed to do a year ago. Is their system of Government the only one fit for rational beings to live under? What are the peculiar privileges enjoyed by them under their democratic institutions, which cannot be obtained under the old European monarchies? In the Old World we see rational liberty springing up under the shadow of thrones, and thriving amazingly; we see one of the most despotic of European monarchs setting his slaves at liberty, while in America,—with all her arrogant claims to superior enlightenment, we see the sword unsheathed for the purpose of perpetuating the reign of slavery. Who would hesitate to choose between the liberty which prevails in America, and that which obtains in most countries of Europe, especially in Great Britain? A model Government is not that which permits its subjects to act just as they please. That is the best Government under which people are permitted to enjoy their own, and to lead quiet and peaceable lives, without the fear of molestation from a power superior to the law; and, these points being secured, it matters little whether the Chief of the State be called a Prince or a President. Free democratic institutions, and the sovereign people, are very convenient terms for the stump orator. Like the music of Orpheus, "they work on the crowd;" but, certainly, democratic principles, as developed in America, have nothing in them to recommend them to the acceptance of Old World communities.

The history of the United States during the last few months makes us think more of our old-fashioned Kings, Queens, and Aristocracies, than ever we did before.

Colonel Haultain.

Colonel Haultain, although but a short time settled in Peterboro', has been long a resident in the Province, and is well-known in many sections of the country. He is one of a class, than whom nobler men are not to be found in any rank or station. He is a Christian soldier of the stamp of Havelock and of Hedley Vicars. During a long career in the army, he has used all the influence of his position and constant personal labour on behalf of religious objects. It would be well for Canada were there more men of his stamp in the Legislature, and the Reformers of Peterboro have honored themselves by nominating him. We hope that there is no doubt of his return. The people of Peterboro' may rely upon it that Colonel Haultain's pledges will all be redeemed. Mr. Conger is his only opponent. Between the two men there can be no hesitation. Mr. Conger is the personification of trickery and deceit; Colonel Haultain is all honor and integrity.—Toronto Globe.

OUR AGENT.

Mr. W. Irvine will visit Otonabee and Asphodel in a few days, on a canvassing tour for subscribers. He is authorized to receive moneys and transact business for us. We hope our friends in these Townships, and they are many, will give Mr. Irvine a welcome, and aid him in securing a large list of new names to our paper.

The Examiner,
THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1861.

COL. HAULTAIN'S CANVASS.

The work goes bravely on, and everywhere the Colonel is received with enthusiasm. No man could have been brought into the field for whom the party would have worked more with a will. It is a satisfaction, a pleasure, and a duty, to work for a man like Col. Haultain, and that fact itself will aid much in the canvass.

At the time we go to press the Township Committees are not complete. We will publish them next issue.

THE CONTEST.

Having Mr. Conger's past weather-cock policy in view, we had not much faith in his political honesty, and expressed no surprise when he issued his Opposition address. He knew that to profess himself a ministerialist would ensure defeat, and that his only chance of again representing this county was to hoist false colors and run on the anti-ministerial tack. But we did expect that he would profess Reform principles until the polling days, and were quite unprepared for the pitiable displays of Saturday last, when he must have convinced even the dullest of his supporters that his printed professions and his verbal creed are directly antagonistic.

We really are at a loss to know whether to thank him for candour, or charge him with imbecility—candor in showing the cloven foot at once, or imbecility in being unable for so short a time to keep up the assumed disguise. His position at the meetings on Saturday was a difficult and unenviable one, and he ingeniously contrived to make it worse. He was not new to us. He had been tried and found wanting, and, in consequence, rejected at the last election: and he had, therefore, if possible, to explain away past misconduct—principles discarded and professions cast to the winds.—How did he succeed? Admirably ill! 'Gentlemen,' says Mr. Conger, in effect, 'read my address, my principles are Reform precisely the same as my opponent's.' He wants Representation by Population; so do I. It is nothing more than justice to Upper Canada. But I do not wish to carry the measure; in fact it can't be carried; it would be necessary to alter the constitution first; and any attempt to carry it would be revolutionary and republican, and end in transferring the seat of Government to Washington.' Here is downright contradiction with a vengeance! We are told that the thing is good and bad at the same time; that it is good and we ought to have it; that it is bad and we shan't get it. Mr. Conger knows that some of his party profess themselves for, and others against the measure, and considering himself a clever fellow he resolves to espouse both sides, hoping to win a Prison Inspectorship, at least, for his smartness.

Regarding the Grand Trunk Railroad he was equally various. In his printed address he is desirous of severing the connection between it and the Government, and resolute against more of the public money being squandered on it; in his verbal address he is of a different opinion. The road then becomes the finest in the world—a magnificent luxury for which he thinks we need not grudge to pay a few millions occasionally. Besides, he has made a calculation and finds we have received an indirect benefit by the road of 4s 6d for every 6d we have paid for it. We fear the benefit has been so indirect that it has not yet reached us in that proportion; but we cannot deny that Mr. Conger is a Baron Munchausen at figures. Perhaps he may find time before nomination day to tell us what benefit—direct or indirect—we have derived from the mysterious disappearance of that £1,500! We shall make no farther comment on Mr. Conger's political views. The two specimens given will show that they are very accomodating; though, unfortunately for himself, the spirit of contradiction was so strong upon him that for every two words he put in for Reform he adventured four for the Ministry and corruption. The truth appears to be that Mr. Conger thinks politics are at best unprofitable, and having no decided views on the subject himself, is satisfied to swear to what the Ministry say. He, therefore, insinuates that his chief claim to our support is for services rendered in opening up the back country, for which his only reward hitherto (though his friends say he got $5 a day,) has been the satisfaction of doing good. Now, the fact is that Mr. Conger is guilty of great presumption in making this statement. The plan of opening up and settling these back townships was adopted over 14 years ago, but because a considerable portion of the work was done while he was member, he takes all the credit to himself. He might as well claim the merit of deepening the St. Lawrence. And if, as we understood him to say, he had to vote with the ministry in order to get the money for opening up that country, how came it that the grants were continued and the Burleigh road opened whilst Mr. Short was member, when he voted against the Government? The proper explanation is that the opening up of that country is the best speculation the Ministry has made, and the proceeds of land sales, &c, already returned to the Exchequer are little short of the whole amount expended, and will soon exceed it, affording besides offices and emoluments to many needy supporters of the Ministry. Mr. Conger's claims to support on this ground are therefore simply absurd.

Between the two candidates there cannot be a moment's hesitation in making a choice. Col. Haultain is an old soldier and a Christian, who says what he means, and intends to perform what he promises. In politics he is a thorough and staunch Reformer. His views are decided, and do not in any particular partake of the cameleon-like nature of Mr. Conger's; and we venture to say that there are but few who hear him express them but will record their votes for him at the polls.

We cannot help saying, in conclusion, that we think Mr. Conger would have best consulted his own interests by keeping in the back ground until the £1,500 affair was cleared up—finally decided, or forgotten. None can say that it has yet been solved to the satisfaction of honest men; and if the case is appealed it may be that Chancellor Blake's decision, which was hostile to Conger, may yet be adopted. To prevent him being placed in the awkward position which such a result would entail, we are satisfied the electors will do him a service by electing him to stay at home; and this, without hesitation, we affirm will be the result of the contest.

THE ISSUES.

In all important undertakings it is deemed prudent to think well before acting, as by doing so we are more likely to act better. In the important task now before the electors of Canada it is proper that they think well before deciding who are to represent them for the next four years. It is too often the case that electors cast their votes from a mere whim—a preference for one man over the other, irrespective of the consequences entailed in that preference. As it is admitted that the present election is a sort of turning point in the history of our country, it becomes the people before delegating the power in their hands to weigh well what they intend to do ere parting with it. This election is moreover marked for the absence of a general question, such as has usually characterised Canada elections. There is no "ticket" or rallying cry advocated by one party in the country and opposed by another. Still there is an issue, and an issue of momentous consequence for the electors to decide in less than four weeks from the present time, and that issue is, shall the present Ministry be sustained or shall they be condemned. The tremendous efforts of the Ministry themselves and their friends all over the country show the anxiety felt by them to obtain a further lease of power, as well as the dread of their being beaten. Promises, bribes, warnings and every imaginable auxiliary, have been and will be employed to carry their point. The Attorney General must make a speech at the nomination for his colleague the Post-Master General, the other day, to induce his constituency to return him again to Parliament, and it will require all the available assistance at command to re-elect him. Mr Cockburn who opposes him comes out with a well written address, and in his speech at the nomination puts the issues before the electors in a clear light. It is thought that he will beat Mr. Smith. Mr. Cockburn in his address says "The great question to be decided at the election is whether the Administration are entitled by their past acts and determination of future policy to the confidence of the people." After deciding in his opinion that it is not, he says, "If elected, my vote shall be given unhesitatingly against them on every question involving a want of confidence." This is meeting the question fairly, and it is the questions to be decide at the Polls.

The Organs of the Government raise all sorts of issues, and reproduce all and every the sins of the Opposition, and tell the people that they are asked to vote against measures, that no one now comes out to advocate,—such as the dissolution of the Union and appeals to Washington, whereas the true measure to settle at the polls is: shall the present Ministry be sustained, or shall they be condemned.

This is the question of questions for the electors to settle so far as they are concerned, and in voting for Mr. Conger they say in effect "we approve of the Cartier-Macdonald Administration, and are willing to give them a new term of office." If, on the other hand, they think as we do that that administration is richly worthy of condemnation for their conspiracies against the liberties of the people, for their reckless expenditure of the people's money, and for increasing fearfully their burdens, then let them vote for Colonel Haultain, who comes out to oppose them. Let it not be said that the County of Peterborough, so long noted for its Reform tendencies, has turned round to support such a corrupt Ministry as the one now retiring from Office. We are pleased to know that the gallant Colonel is everywhere received with enthusiasm. His easy manner of expressing his sentiments makes a favorable impression, and the people begin to realize in supporting him, they support a gentleman and an honest man. Let the people turn out on Nomination Day and give him a large vote.

THE ELECTIONS.

In London Mr. Carling was elected by acclamation. In Jacques Cartier Mr. Tasse was returned without opposition. Mr. Cauchon, Commissioner of Public Works, has also been elected without opposition for Quebec. At the Kingston nomination the Sheriff declared the show of hands to be for Mr. McDonald; many, however—Mr. Gildersleave Mayor of the City among the number, believe the decision an unfair one. By a characteristic turn of meanness the nominations for Kingston and South Ontario were arranged for the same day, thereby preventing Mr. Mowat being present in person at the Kingston nomination. He was represented by Mr. George Brown.

In West Northumberland the Post Master General is having a hard time; at the nomination Mr. John A. McDonald made a great effort for his colleague, but to little purpose. When the show of hands was taken Mr. Cockburn is said to have had three to one against Smith.

In Victoria Mr. Dunsford bids well to defeat Cameron, and we heartily hope he may. We hear that Mr. Cameron succeeded in drumming his friends together at the nomination and carried the show of hands, but that is no index to the feeling in the County.

In Durham Mr. John Shuter Smith is succeeding admirably, with a fair prospect of defeating Burton.

They are having lively times in Toronto; the united Ministerial force of men, money and influence, is brought to bear against Mr. Brown, and if he is elected it will be a great triumph to the Opposition.

Throughout the entire Province the prospects are cheering, but as we said last week not much reliance can be placed on most reports during the excitement of the elections.

POSTSCRIPT.

As we go to press we hear direct from the Front that the friends of Hon. Sidney Smith are despairing of his election in West Northumberland, and that if he loses there he will certainly be a candidate for this County. Exciting times ahead!

NOMINATION DAY.

The Nomination takes place on Saturday at noon, in front of the Court House.

☞We are authorized to contradict the Review's statement that Wm. Lundy, Esq., is a supporter of Mr. Conger. Mr. Lundy is a staunch adherent to Reform principles, and can never consent to support a fast-and-loose political hack like Mr. Conger. Mr. Lundy is a member of Col. Haultain's Central Committee.

£1,500.—At the meetings on Saturday calls were made for an explanation of the £1,500 affair, but beyond an awkward, nervous stagger, and a sudden change in the colour of his face, Mr. Conger deigned neither explanation nor reply of any kind.—Electors, let no opportunity pass to induce Mr. Conger to explain away this mystery.

Rowdyism.—We regret much that we should have it in our power to make complaints against any one for ill-behavior, and more especially against those who differ in opinions with us, lest we should be charged with a desire to wrongfully accuse parties. But we must say that the conduct of certain of Mr. Conger's friends at the meeting in Ashburnham on Saturday night was disgraceful. Notice was given that Colonel Haultain would address the electors of Ashburnham, on Saturday night; and at the hour appointed the hall was filled. Scattered in the crowd were the parties referred to, [men who should be above such conduct, and whose names we will not make public at present,] mostly from the Peterborough side of the River. Repeated annoyances were made, and at the conclusion of the Colonel's speech these parties kept up a continuous shout of "Conger, Conger," till that individual made his appearance. Any amount of cheering was then manufactured to order, and every effort was made to turn the meeting to Conger's account. Thanks to the good men and true of Ashburnham, order was preserved to the end, when the electors left, three-fourths of them convinced that Col. Haultain should receive their votes, but all agreed that the conduct of Mr. Conger's friends, or such of them as were there, was highly reprehensible.

Joking, surely.—The Review tells us that the old game of "brag" is being recommenced by Col. Haultain's friends! In the same column we read, "There never was a time in this County when a political party felt in better heart, or worked with a more thorough-go-estiment of success than do Mr. Conger's friends at this moment." The editor must be joking.

Murder.—We understand that an old man living alone in a shanty in Verulam, near Fenelon Falls, was murdered on the night of Friday last, by some person unknown. No particulars.

"A PRAYING COLONEL."

A communication signed X and dated Peterboro, June 18, appears in the Leader respecting the election in this County. The writer (whom we believe to be no other individual than the scribe of the Congreve) has been misinformed about the meeting on Monday, the 21st; otherwise he states what he knows to be quite untrue. He writes "there were about 20 persons present,"—the truth is there were three times that number,—and the statement that "these men were elected by themselves to represent themselves" is equally false with the other. Again, X tells us there were dissentions among the delegates; that is an untrue as the rest, not one hand was raised in opposition, and the chairman declared the nomination carried unanimously. X states that Mr. Grover's name was "proposed without his consent;"—two delegates from Norwood, Messrs. W. Stott and W. Sargeant, men of the highest respectability and integrity, distinctly intimated that Mr. Grover had consented to his name being brought before the Convention, and in the event of his receiving the nomination was prepared to pledge himself to vote want of confidence in the Ministry.

We need not follow X further; the above is enough to discredit anything he might say. Considering the character of the writer no delegate to the Convention will be troubled with his abuse, but in duty bound we think Col. Haultain should be protected from the shafts of X's spleen.—We repeat what we stated last week that the nomination was unsolicited, indeed it was forced upon him; but what is that fact to an unprincipled man, if to make it appear that an opponent sought nomination, would best serve his purpose.

But that is not the worst of it. Think of such expressions as "a parrot of the Exeter Hall stamp," "a praying Colonel from God knows where," &c. Before two weeks are over X and his friends will be taught that to be a God-fearing man is no reproach, and that the electors of Peterboro' County place uprightness and integrity before intrigue and dishonesty.

Total Vote, 277——Majority against, 45.

THE LAW FOR THE PREVENTION OF BRIBERY.

The law for the prevention of bribery at elections, it will be observed, is very stringent. We advise our friends to bear in mind the following extracts from the Act, and to keep a watchful eye on the conduct of electioneering agents and canvassers:

The following persons shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and punishable accordingly:—

Every person who shall directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give, lend, or agree to give or lend, or shall offer, or promise to procure, or endeavour to procure any money or valuable consideration to or for any voter, or to or for any person, in order to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting, or shall corruptly do any such act as aforesaid, on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any election.

Every person who shall directly or indirectly by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give, or offer, promise, or promise to procure, or endeavour to procure any office, place, or employment to or for any voter, or any person on behalf of voters, or to any person to refrain from voting, or corruptly do any such act on account of votes, having voted or refrained, &c.

Every person who shall make any gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement as aforesaid, to or for any person in order to induce such persons to procure the return of any person to serve in Parliament, or the vote of any voter at the election.

Every person who shall upon or in consequence of any such gift, loan, &c. procure the return of any person or the vote of any voter.

Every person who shall advance or pay, or cause to be advanced, &c. any money to or for the use of any other person, with the intent that such money or any part thereof shall be expended in bribery at any election, or who shall knowingly pay or cause to be paid any money to any person in discharge or repayment of any money wholly or in part of any money expended in bribery at any election.

And such persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who shall sue for the same with full costs of suits.

The following persons shall also be deemed guilty of bribery:—

Every voter contracting to vote for money, gift, loan, &c.

Every voter who, after such election, receives money, gift, loan, &c. for voting or refraining from voting.

And such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to forfeit two hundred dollars, &c.

The hiring of vehicles to carry voters to the polls, &c. is illegal in electors as well as in candidates, and any elector who shall so hire is disqualified from voting at such elections, and liable to forfeit the sum of thirty dollars.

Persons using violence or intimidation at elections are guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to a fine of two hundred dollars.

Contracts even for lawful expenses arising out of elections are void.

THE CROPS.

The late genial showers have brought along the crops finely, and present appearances indicate a repetition of last years bountiful harvest. As regards Fall Wheat from all we can learn there is good ground to fear that there will be but a very middling yield. The absence of frost last fall, the weight of snow and its long continuance, added to the repeated spring frosts, have all tended to destroy the plant. Many fields in this vicinity have been plowed up, and many more should have been ploughed, while many that look well at a distance when closely examined show unmistakably that at best a small yield will be gathered. If reports are correct not over one field in ten can be called good, and not more than three in ten can be termed middling, the remainder may be set down as poor. The Fall Wheat crop may therefore be put down as very deficient. Spring Wheat, Peas, and Oats are coming on well, and promise well. The moss may be said of all other cereals. The meadows are looking well and abundance of hay will again be gathered for supporting stock during our long severe winter. We may congratulate ourselves that we are not forced to leave the field for the camp, like our neighbors south of us. We have sowed and we can reap. We can sit under our vine and fig tree, none daring to make us afraid.

The quantity of square timber coming down the river this year is quite unprecedented. The water has lowered considerably and it is difficult to run down cribs.—A good deal we are told has yet to come down.

☞The semi-annual examination of pupils in the Grammar, Union and Common School takes place to-day and to-morrow.

PRINCE ALFRED.

Colonel Irvine was in town on Saturday making arrangements for the reception of his Royal Highness, Prince Alfred, and suite, who will arrive here this afternoon. They will come by the way of the Falls, whither they went to spend Saturday and Sunday. His Excellency the Governor-General Sir Edmund Head, Lady and Miss Head, and Miss Shaw Lefevre, accompany his Royal Highness. The suite is composed of the following gentlemen: Major Cowell, Governor to the Prince; Mr. Wharton of the Royal Navy; Colonel Conolly, A. A. General; Capt. Retallack, A. D. C., and Lieut.-Col. Irvine, A. D. C. A splendid set of rooms has been engaged at the Rossin House for the reception of the Prince.—Leader.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

GENTLEMEN:—

The most important era in the political history of Canada has arrived. A general election is upon us. The time has come for us to determine whether we will resist corruption, taxation, high tariffs, extravagance, public debt, and that concomitant which involves all these evils [Lower Canada Domination] or whether we will tamely submit our necks to the collar.

Upper Canada expects every man to do his duty at this crisis. And Upper Canada will do her duty with few exceptions. Let us see if Peterboro will be among the exceptions. Moreover, every man has a duty to perform if he expects to make this country his home and hold property in it, and expects his children to do the same. That duty is obvious. That duty is to oppose the return of Mr. Conger at the coming election, or any other man who has supported such a corrupt administration as that which has held its withering sway over this Province for the last seven years. Mr. Conger has been a thick and thin supporter of this infamous Coalition. And who are they? They are composed of a few Upper Canada conservatives, so called, who would sell their country and constituents for the spoils of power and patronage, and a lot of Lower Canada ex-rebels and annexationists. And what have they done? Ah! here hangs a tale.

To begin: they have added FORTY MILLIONS of dollars to the public debt. They have doubled the duties on foreign manufactures and groceries. They have squandered the public funds. They have pandered to Lower Canada and the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the most outrageous manner, and heaped insults upon Upper Canada too great for a virtuous people to bear.

Let us recount a few of their delinquencies. We will begin with the Seigniorial Tenure Bill. One of the greatest outrages ever perpetrated upon a civilized community, was in this instance inflicted upon Upper Canada by the Coalition granting nearly $5,000,000 out of the public funds, three fourths of which comes out of Upper Canada, to indemnify the Seigniors of Lower Canada, or in other words to buy the land occupied by Lower Canadian Frenchmen, for their sole benefit and behoof. Let me assure you, gentlemen, that history furnishes no parallel to this outrage. And let me tell you, moreover, if you submit to it tamely you deserve its consequences.

Mr. Conger supports the men who voted to grant an additional subsidy of $800,000 to the Ocean Mail service; to sustain Mr Galt in an unconstitutional act, that of taking $1,174,000 out of the public chest and handing it over to the Grand Trunk Company, notwithstanding the country is involved in that most from to the extent of $20,000,000; against giving out the public printing by contract, and to double the actual value of ex-work, to that firm or monopoly of Desberats & Derbishire, who have held that sinecure since the Union; for the Militia Bill, the carrying out of which has cost the country $90,000 during the last five years against $60,000 for the five previous years, a miserable farce got up for the benefit of stock jobbers and place hunters; for the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the improvement and construction of piers on the Lower St. Lawrence, merely for the accommodation of Lower Canada; for all these measures and precedents, and voted to sustain a Ministry who deny to Upper Canada the right of representation by numbers, and who have ruled and are determined to rule Upper Canada with a rod of iron, and rob her while they rule her.

A blacker and still more extended catalogue can be arrayed against Mr. Conger and the Coalition, but let this suffice. How are these facts met and attempted to be refuted? Forsooth by telling you they are all lies. This is a very convenient and easy way to enforce conviction. We hope the electors will eschew all such logic. Inform yourselves of the facts, even if you are obliged to refer to the journals of the House. Truth must prevail and truth will prevail. But sometimes it prevails too late. Let the Coalition rule another term; let Mr. Galt have the sole control and disbursement of the public funds; let a servile support be given to them a little longer and the debt will reach $100,000,000, and the tariff forty of fifty per cent advalorem.—Look at the increase of duty by the Coalition:—

The duty in 1855, raised in 1858 to

	per cent	per cent.
On Coffee	8½	15
Molasses	16	30
Refined Sugar	16	40
Tea	16	25
Boots and Shoes	12½	25
Farmers	12½	25
Cotton Goods	..	20

Here are a few of the blessings of Coalition aided by Mr. Conger. And yet the expenditure exceeds the revenue by about $4,000,000 per annum. The Administration are obliged to borrow.

Fellow electors, if you are freeholders, and fortunately in this country where industry and husbandry are so well rewarded, we presume nearly all the electors are free holders, beware of supporting such a system.

The country is becoming heavily mortgaged. Your property is becoming involved in the public incumbrance. Therefore taxes and tariffs must necessarily increase as the public debt increases.

On the other hand, if you have nothing, and want to improve your fortunes by place or pension, you can support the Coalition in all its beauties and chances. But remember the chances are pretty small and "growing beautifully less by degrees."

You will have seen, gentlemen, before this reaches you, the address of the Opposition Candidate, F. W. Haultain, and you will observe the policy he proposes to pursue. You will find him opposed to this late system of corruption. Therefore, soliciting a generous support for the Opposition Candidate, sustained by the convictions of truth, justice and right, we trust that for the sake of your own interests, that we shall not appeal to you in vain.

AN ELECTOR.

Peterboro', June 24, 1861.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—In the Toronto Daily Leader of the 20th instant, a letter appears signed X, in which it is stated that I "said after the Convention that we must have an election, and they wanted to get the rich Englishman's money out of him." Now, Sir, I need hardly say these words were never used by me. I recollect that when in Cairn's Hotel after the nomination some of Mr Conger's friends asked me who had been brought out. I answered "Col. Haultain." Some objections were made on the ground of his being a stranger. I replied that men of Col. Haultain's stamp were much needed in Parliament, and I thought no man who had been so long in the army could fairly be called a stranger to any good British subject.

Mr. Conger's friends seem very anxious about the Colonel; they had better mind their own man, that will give them enough to do. The men who brought out Colonel Haultain are not the kind to fleece a candidate; I wish that I could say as much of some of Mr. Conger's friends, they follow the poor man round like so many hungry hounds, and their cry is "give, give."—Electors in voting for Col. Haultain have at least the certainty of voting for an honest man; Mr. Conger has been tried and found wanting. He was elected about six years ago by a majority of upwards of 300; nearly every pledge he made to the electors was broken, and when he returned in two years for re-election he was rejected.—What has he done these past four years to regain the lost confidence of the people.—The only thing I can think of is the notorious £1,500 chissel. If the County must be represented by a chisseller let us have a choice; there is Whitmarsh of Wolford, Bowes of Toronto, M. Baby of down below; they should all run, and let the best at the trade win.

Mr. Conger prates about loyalty. People in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. Has he forget the year 1838, when in a fit of disloyalty he threw up his commision, and when his dwelling was searched for hidden rebel arms. Does he remember how many barrels of gun-powder Codfish Cartier bought and sent up to St. Dennis to shoot down loyal British troops, and this is the man Mr. Conger delights to honor. And has Mr. Conger forgot the Annexation Manifesto of Messrs. Galt and Rose. It is all very well to pardon rebels, but it is wrong to place them in places of power and trust where they can insult the loyal men of Western Canada with impunity.

I think the Leader's correspondent X would do the country a service by devising some means to make the leather organ disgorge the York Roads money; falsehood will not make Mr. Conger's case any better, and his friends may as well make up their minds to it at once.

Yours truly,

JAMES MILLER.

LATEST from EUROPE,

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

NEW-YORK, June 20.

The Africa arrived at 7.30 this a. m. she brings £65,000 in specie.

The Syrian question is settled.

Syria is to be governed by the Christians with two sub-governors, Druse and Maronite.

The Turkish troops will occupy the Maine roads.

In the House of Lords, after some opposition, the Government financial measures passed the second reading.

In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell, in reply to the inquiry whether the interdiction of privateers, &c. from bringing prizes into British ports was according to former practice, said the Queen's Advocate's opinion was favourable to the right of interdiction, which the laws of nations gave every Power; hence the Government issued the prohibition.

Mr Gregory being appealed to, to postpone his motion in reference to the prompt recognition of the Southern Confederacy, said, his only motive was to make a fair statement of the Southern side of the question, that of the Northern States being already before the public. At the wish of the House, however, he assented, and the motion was postponed sine die.

It was reported that United States orders for 275,000 muskets had reached Frankfort.

Count Cavour's death was almost universally deplored.

Funds were depressed in London, Paris, and elsewhere, in consequence of Count Cavour's obsequies on the 7th, in which with almost Royal pomp, great bodies of Staff officers and the whole population of Turin participated.

Parliament adjourned for three days.

The King had entrusted the formation of a new Ministry to Baron Recasoli. He is unwell.

Garibaldi is also reported seriously ill at Caprera.

The Pope is likewise indisposed.

It is reported that Emperor Napoleon interdicted Prince Napoleon visiting the United States, but he will visit Canada.

The collection of taxes in Hungary, by Military execution was carried out with the greatest severity.

ARRIVAL OF THE ANGLO-SAXON

ST. JOHN'S, N. B. June 22.

The steam-ship Anglo-Saxon, from Liverpool 13th, via Londonderry 14th, was signalled off this point at 6.30 this evening by the news yacht of the Associated Press, en route to Quebec.

The political news is unimportant.

The Great Eastern was to leave for Quebec with troops on the 24th instant, and the Golden Fleece was to leave Dublin on the 4th of July on the same errand.

The sales of cotton in the Liverpool market for the three days, including Wednesday, were 22,000 bales, of which 6,000 were on speculation and export. The market was dull and unchanged.

Breadstuffs of all qualities had declined. Corn steady. Provisions quiet.

Canada 89½ a 90 for money, and 90¼ a 90½ for account.

ARRIVAL OF THE BREMEN.

NEW-YORK, June 23.

The steam-ship Bremen, from Bremen via Southampton, on the 12th, arrived at six o'clock this evening.

The British Government has determined to send three regiments of infantry, and sufficient artillery and munitions of war to reinforce the North American Garrisons. It is thought desirable to place them in a condition to command respect from the irregular bodies which in a moment of excitement might assail them.

The Great Eastern conveys the troops.

The Paris Moniteur publishes the declaration, that Napoleon intends maintaining the strictest neutrality in the American war, enjoining all Frenchmen not to violate that neutrality by engaging in privateers, or enrolling in the army on either side, at the risk of forfeiting all claim upon his Government.

It is reported that the treaty between France and Spain securing possession of the Antilles is officially denied.

The new Italian Ministry is established. Baron Ricasoli assumes the Presidency of the Council and Foreign Affairs.

The Pope's health is entirely re-established.

The Porte consents to the complete union of the Principalities.

An International Conference will shortly assemble at Paris for the satisfactory settlement of the question.

The Turks have extorted the signatures of Bulgarians to addresses favorable to the existing state of things, under threats of death. Some districts were agitated.

Omar Pascha had taken measures to prevent the Montenegrins from perpetrating further massacres.

The International Conference of Constantinople has resolved, that the Governor of Lebanon should be appointed for three years, and could not be dismissed without a previous understanding between the Porte and the Great Powers.

At the expiration of three years, the Porte is to come to a fresh understanding with the Powers. The Conference resolved that the Governor may be chosen from the Christian subjects by the Sultan, in any Province of the Empire.

Dervish Pasha was marching with 4,000 men against the insurgents, by whom his vanguard had been beaten.

The Boys of Provinces refuse to recognize concessions made to Christians in Omar Pasha's proclamation, as being opposed to the Koran.

The English and French Ambassadors were established at Pekin.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE County of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

Having been urgently solicited by those representing a large section of the Electors of the County, to become a Candidate at the forthcoming election, I have consented to do so.

I come forward deeply impressed with the responsibility that will attach to any one chosen to represent you at the period of the history of Canada, and I should shrink from the risk of incurring it, had I not learnt that all necessary wisdom is imparted to those who seek it from the All-wise Director of all hearts.

Not having the advantage of a long residence amongst you, it is necessary for me to state briefly my political opinions.

Having been a Commission in Her Majesty's Service for upwards of 21 years, I need scarcely say that I have imbibed a strong attachment to the British crown and country, and a love of honor, order, and justice.

The former would lead me to resist to the uttermost any attempts of any party to dis-sever or weaken our connection with the mother country, and the latter would induce me to render justice to all parties and all creeds, and confine my efforts to obtain justice within lawful and constitutional limits.

As regards the prominent questions now before the country, I feel that no ambiguity should be used in expressing my views.

I think it an injustice that Upper Canada should be ruled by a small minority of her representatives, and every constitutional means should be employed to remove this injustice, without inflicting a like injustice on the Eastern section.

Representation by population appears to me common justice to the superiority in numbers and wealth of Upper Canada, and would tend to give us our fair weight in the United Legislature.

I would vote, therefore, for that measure, and wish to see removed from power those who now oppose it.

I wish to see an immediate and complete separation between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway, and should vote that no further aid be given it from the public treasury: Also, that no person connected with the Government of the country should be permitted to hold any official position in its management.

As regards the public finances, I would allow of no excess of expenditure over income, and would retain all disbursements as much as possible in the hands of Parliament.

The commonest principles of political morality demand, that no Minister of the Crown should take advantage of his position as such to benefit himself by pecuniary speculations, and I heartily hope to see the day, when men who so transgress will meet with the condemnation they merit.

Should I be returned as your representative, I need scarcely say that the interests of the County will demand my constant care, and it would give me great pleasure to consult with all parties as to how best to further these interests. The capabilities of the county augur a prosperous future.

A more detailed statement of my opinions, I hope to give you in person.

I should strive to treat with courtesy all who may honestly differ with me; but I hope never to fail in denouncing dishonesty and unfaithfulness wherever found.

And may He who overrules all events, further every right endeavour to raise the standard of honor and righteousness in this our country.

I remain,

GENTLEMEN,
Your faithful servant,
FRED. W. HAULTAIN.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT

ELECTORS

OF THE

COUNTY OF PETERBORO'.

GENTLEMEN,

The time having again arrived when you are called upon to elect a member to represent you in the Legislative Assembly of this Province, I have at the solicitation of a large number of the Electors of this County, consented to offer myself as a candidate for your suffrages.

Twenty years residence among you, chiefly spent in the discharge of arduous and responsible public duties, must I think have afforded you ample opportunity to judge of my fitness to serve you. And the fact of my having at the solicitation of some of you, left a lucrative situation to enter that service—affords sufficient evidence that I have no object to gratify, except an honest pride of being your representative.

The unexpected—though yet but partial success—which has attended my exertions to open a country in rear of us—nearly as large as all Ireland—and which at this moment bids fair to become as populous as any portion of Canada, will I think serve to illustrate how much is often lost by sending men to Parliament without any higher object than the mere support of individuals or parties. "Measures, not Men," has ever been my motto, and if I should again be honored with a seat in Parliament, I shall, as heretofore, be found ready to support a good measure, without reference to the source from which it may emanate.

Although my political opinions are well known to most of you, it may not at this time be amiss to be more than usually explicit upon a few of the important questions now before the County.

First then—Representation by Population, in so far as the Legislative Assembly is concerned, is a measure which shall continue to have my support, and I have no hesitation in saying that my adhesion to party will be greatly influenced by the chances it may afford me of carrying this measure.

As a Canadian, strongly imbued with feelings of loyalty and attachment to the British Crown and Government, and believing that our connection with the mother country depends upon the maintainance of the Union between Upper and Lower Canada, I shall resist all attempts, from whatever quarter they may come, to dissolve that Union.

I believe that a Federal Union of all the British Provinces, leaving to each the management of its own internal affairs, would create harmony and commercial prosperity amongst ourselves and tend greatly to strengthen British feeling on this continent.

I desire to see all connection between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway removed, and shall oppose further Provincial aid to that enterprise.

I shall oppose any expenditure of the public money without the sanction of Parliament.

I shall urge Retrenchment in the public expenditure, and a reduction of Law costs.

I am in favor of reducing to a nominal rate, the duty upon tea and sugar, when entered by the St. Lawrence.

I am also in favor of such an adjustment of the Tariff between this country and the United States of America, as will place the Manufacturers and Agriculturists of this Province upon a footing of equality with the same class of persons in that country.

I shall support the immediate passing of an equitable bankrupt law, giving protection to debtor and creditor. I entertain serious doubts as to the propriety of longer continuing to Municipal Councils the power of unlimited taxation, and shall consider whether this power may not be safely abridged.

I believe that our local position and great natural resources, if properly developed, will serve to place the Town of Peterboro in the front rank of prosperity and greatness, and I shall, if in a position to do so, use every means in my power to advance its interests.

The Bobcaygeon and Burleigh Colonization roads, together with such other important, though shorter lines entering the new country at the most available points will continue to receive my attention. Trusting before many days to have an opportunity of meeting you in your several localities, when I can more fully explain my views.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen,
Very faithful y yours,
W. S. CONGER.

PROSPECTUS

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL

Map of Upper Canada,

TOGETHER WITH A

DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY

OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF

N'H & S'H MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONLIN, BONNET & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, as received from the latest official authority; also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the boundaries and names of each County and Township, the Great Lakes, Rivers, and principal Mill Streams. Tables showing the Variation of Time between each County Seat and the City of Toronto from the Magnetic Observatory, Toronto. The Population of each City, Town, County and Township will also be given, with other important and useful information, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province, executed in the best style of the art.

Where old plans are given on the above Map as occupied Plots, in the usual pointed detail of the above Townships, showing subdivisions, lots, and allotments, with the names of the proprietors as they appeared previous to the last Census, together with the Public Reserves, Indian Reserves, Indian Settlements, Public Roads, &c., together with all other information which may be found useful to Settlers, Travellers, Emigrants, Merchants, Mechanics, Farmers, Capitalists, and Surveyors.

The publishers being practical engravers, draughtsmen, &c., are thereby enabled to assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada.

WHAT IS THE BEST WAY TO SOW GRAIN?

MR. EDITOR,—The above question having been put to me by some of my neighbour farmers, will you be so kind as to allow me a place to express my opinion on the subject?

Forty years ago broad-cast sowing was the only way I ever had seen practised. But very shortly after that time several kinds of machines were brought into use for sowing, and among them were some that sowed in drills. The drill-sowing being, adopted on the farm that I lived on, I then got a good deal of practice in sowing with the machine, and made it my study to watch its effects on the grain while growing. I then, with members of others, preferred drill-sowing to any other mode, for the following reasons: First, it takes about a quarter less seed to sow a given quantity of land, as the machine puts it in a uniform depth and is all covered, which is far from being the case in broadcast sowing.—Second, the sun and air getting in between the drills, hastens the growth of the grain. This is more especially the case in rich land and in wet seasons. When I came to Canada I began to farm on new land, and for a long time my drill-sowing was laid aside. About 7 or 8 years ago, having got some clear land, I again tried it by using a one horse plough, but the process was too slow to be profitable. Last fall I used one of James Hamilton's patent combined Sower and Cultivator, and found it to answer well. It is simply a common Cultivator with a Seed Sower attached at pleasure — the back teeth of the Cultivator cut while sowing. I sowed the greater part of my Spring grain with this machine, and I find what was sown with it is in quite a forward state, compared with what I sowed broadcast at the same time. This machine sows from one to four inches deep, and care should be taken not to sow too deep. I consider two inches a proper depth. If grain is sown four inches deep it will come up weak and sickly. I shall wait the result of this sowing and give you an account of it. In the meantime,

I remain, yours truly,
DAVID PORTER.

Dover, June 18, 1861.

How to Discredit a Witness—Counsel Mr Jenkins, will you have the goodness to answer me, directly or categorically, a few plain questions? Witness—Certainly, sir. C.—Well, Mr Jenkins, is there a female living with you who is known in the neighbourhood as Mrs Jenkins? Witness—I do. C.—Have you ever married her? W.—I have not.—(Here several jurors scowled gloomy on Mr Jenkins.)—C.—That is all Mr Jenkins. Opposing Counsel—Stop one moment: Mr Jenkins, is the female in question your mother? W.—She is!

WOMAN.

Oh, the priceless value of the love of a true woman! Gold cannot purchase a gem so precious! Titles and honor confer upon the heart no such serene happiness! In our darkest moments, when disappointment and ingratitude with corroding care, gather thick around, and even gaunt poverty menaces with its skeleton finger, she gleams around the soul with an angel's smile. Time cannot mar its brilliancy, distance but adds strength to its influence, bolts and bars cannot limit its progress; it follows the prisoner into his dark cell, and smoothes the morsel that appeases his hunger; and in the silence of midnight it plays around his heart and in his dreams he folds to his bosom the form of her who loves on still, though the world has turned from him.

Not a thousand miles from Oneida Co. a coroner's jury lately rendered a verdict that a certain deceased man "came to his death by excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury.

Meggins says job's turkey was fat compared with an old gobbler he shot last week on the Devil's Fork. That was so light it lodged in the air, and he had to get a pole to knock it down!

An Irish piper, who now and then indulged in a glass too much, was accosted by a gentlemen with "Pat, what makes your face so red?" "Please your honor," says Pat, "I always blush when I speaks to a gentleman."

A gentleman who has spent a few days in the region of the oil wells in Pennsylvania, says that in his opinion the Government of the United States—the Confederate States—or some other power ought to interfere at once and put a stop to further boring and pumping for oil on this continent He is quite certain that the oil is being drawn through these wells from the barings of the earth's axes, and that the earth will will cease to turn when the lubrication ceases. Such a supersion would bust anything that ever agitated Well-street and the consequences will be too great for ordinary minds to contemplate or comprehend. It had better be attended to at once!

THE BURNING OF THE OTTAWA POST OFFICE.

Between two and three o'clock on the morning of Sunday last, the rear part of the book-bindery connected with the stationery establishment of Mr. Henry Horne, on the corner of Sparks and Elgin streets, was discovered on fire. Owing to the delay in giving an effective alarm, the flames had time to spread, and soon communicated with the printing office of Messrs. Bell and Woodburn,and the main building, which latter being of wood and three stories high, was soon a burning mass. But ere the dread intruder took possession all the valuable papers, the mails, the books, and even the pigeon holes and the safes used in the delivery department were removed in good order to a place of safety. Not long after, all that remained of the stately building were the blackened walls. Meanwhile the flames spread on Sparks street,and levelled in their progress the tailoring establishment and dwelling of Mr. B. Malin; the millinery shop and dwelling of Mrs. Green; the fruit store of Mr. R. Blagrave, and the dwelling of Mr. McLean, auctioneer; the boot and shoe ware house of Mr. G. W. Smith, and a two story stone store, the Upper part of which was occupied as a law office by Messrs Lewis & Pinhey. Here the fire was stayed after the total destruction of the Post office and seven stores, most of the upper portions of which were occupied as dwellings or business offices. The two upper stories of the Post Office were occupied by Mrs. Macnab, whose furniture,&c., we are glad to know, was mostly saved without serious damage.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THIS most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing. In all cases of nervous debility, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organs structure is not entirely wasted, they will hopelessly destroyed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, still times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purposes they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by bountiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x20 inches, entitled,

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Two Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parian statuettes, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscription. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, &c.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

Above, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecumseh, a Chief of a Tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlet and Almanac—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in travelling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and where any foreign or useless matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food properly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is quickened, and the circulation of the blood. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; bones, a head—and all from a single impurity of the foreign kind of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, fire, bedstraw, in your eyes, from which you a day streak, in a few minutes the whole course of the vessels become disturbed and deranged. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind! All the powerful organs are disturbed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. The Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and purifies it. They are the most powerful, yet safest, clearing and renovating the vital organs.

Planned, indeed, is it to say, that we are able to place with our every reach, a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will positively do the allotted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the whole to brighten with the flush of health and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints, Colds, Coughs, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Female Complaints, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Head-ache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention of Urine, Scrofula, or King's Evil, Sore Throats, Stone and Gravel, Secondary Symptoms, Tic-Douloureux, Tumours, Ulcers, Venereal Affections, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from whatever cause, &c., &c.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

. Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND EXCRETIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ST. VITUS'S DANCE, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do so through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep that healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends, but the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have proved worse than useless to the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, hidden and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary forms of disease it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant demand throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the same standard it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above remedies, and the large doctrine what medicine to employ for the discovering and dangerous affections of the human system that are incidental to our climate. Whilst many inferior remedies depart upon the community have failed and been discarded, these have gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they may never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

TO THE

ELECTORS OF THE County of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

Having been urgently solicited by those representing a large section of the Electors of the County, to become a Candidate at the forthcoming election, I have consented to do so.

I come forward deeply impressed with the responsibility that will attach to any one chosen to represent you at this period of the history of Canada, and I should shrink from the risk of incurring it, had I not learnt that all necessary wisdom is imparted to those who seek it from the All-wise Director of all hearts.

Not having the advantage of a long residence amongst you, it is necessary for me to state briefly my political opinions.

Having borne a Commission in Her Majesty's Service for upwards of 21 years, I need scarcely say that I have imbibed a strong attachment to the British crown and country, and a love of honor, order, and justice.

The former would lead me to resist to the uttermost any attempts of any party to dissever or weaken our connection with the mother country, and the latter would induce me to render justice to all parties and all creeds, and confine my efforts to obtain justice within lawful and constitutional limits.

As regards the prominent questions now before the country, I feel that no ambiguity should be used in expressing my views.

I think it an injustice that Upper Canada should be ruled by a small minority of her representatives, and every constitutional means should be employed to remove this injustice, without inflicting a like injustice on the Eastern section.

Representation by population appears to me common justice to the superiority in numbers and wealth of Upper Canada, and would tend to give us our fair weight in the United Legislature.

I would vote, therefore, for that measure, and wish to see removed from power those who now oppose it.

I wish to see an immediate and complete separation between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway, and should vote that no further aid be given it from the public treasury: Also, that no person connected with the Government of the country should be permitted to hold any official position in its management.

As regards the public finances, I would allow of no excess of expenditure over income, and would retain all disbursements as much as possible in the hands of Parliament.

The commonest principles of political morality demand, that no Minister of the Crown should take advantage of his position as such to benefit himself by pecuniary duty, when men who so transgress will meet with the condemnation they merit.

Should I be returned as your representative, I need scarcely say that the interests of the County will demand my constant care, and it would give me great pleasure to consult with all parties as to how best to further these interests. The capabilities of the county augur a prosperous future.

A more detailed statement of my opinions, I hope to give you in person.

I should strive to treat with courtesy all who may honestly differ with me; but I hope never to fail in denouncing dishonesty and unfaithfulness wherever found.

And may He who overrules all events, further every right endeavour to raise the standard of honor and righteousness in this our country.

I remain,

GENTLEMEN,
Your faithful servant,
FRED. W. HAULTAIN.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT

ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBORO'.

GENTLEMEN,

The time having again arrived when you are called upon to elect a member to represent you in the Legislative Assembly of this Province, I have at the solicitation of a large number of the Electors of this County, consented to offer myself as a candidate for your suffrages.

Twenty years residence among you, chiefly spent in the discharge of arduous and responsible public duties, must I think have afforded you ample opportunity to judge of my fitness to serve you. But the fact of my having at the solicitation of some of you, left a lucrative situation, to enter that service—affords sufficient evidence that I have no object to gratify, except an honest pride of being your representative.

The unexpected—though yet but partial success—which has attended my endeavors to open a country in rear of us—equally as large as all Ireland—and which at this moment bids fair to be filled as populous as any portion of Canada, will I think serve to illustrate how much is often lost by sending men to Parliament without any higher object than the mere support of individuals or parties. "Measures, not Men," has ever been my motto, and if I should again be honored with a seat in Parliament, I shall, as heretofore, be found ready to support a good measure, without reference to the source from which it may emanate.

Although my political opinions are well known to most of you, it may not of this time be amiss to do more than casually explain upon a few of the important questions now before the County.

First then—Representation by Population, in so far as the Legislative Assembly is concerned, is a measure which shall continue to have my support, and I have no hesitation in saying that my adhesion to party will be greatly influenced by the chances it may afford me of carrying this measure.

As a Canadian, strongly imbued with feelings of loyalty and attachment to the British Crown and Government, and believing that our connection with the mother country depends upon the maintainance of the Union between Upper and Lower Canada, I shall resist all attempts, from whatever quarter they may come, to dissolve that Union.

I believe that a Federal Union of all the British Provinces, leaving to each the management of its own internal affairs, would create harmony and commercial prosperity amongst ourselves and tend greatly to strengthen British feeling on this continent.

I desire to see all connection between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway removed, and shall oppose further Provincial aid to that enterprise.

I shall oppose any expenditure of the public money without the sanction of Parliament.

I shall urge Retrenchment in the public expenditure, and a reduction of Law costs.

I am in favor of reducing to a nominal rate, the duty upon tea and sugar, when entered by the St. Lawrence.

I am also in favor of such an adjustment of the Tariff between this country and the United States of America, as will place the Manufacturers and Agriculturists of this Province upon a footing of equality with the same class of persons in that country.

I shall support the immediate passing of an equitable bankrupt law, giving protection to debtor and creditor. I entertain serious doubts as to the propriety of longer continuing to Municipal Councils the power of unlimited taxation, and shall consider whether this power may not be safely abridged.

I believe that our local position and great natural resources, if properly developed, will serve to place the Town of Peterboro in the front rank of prosperity and greatness, and I shall, if in a position to do so, use every means in my power to advance its interests.

The Rebecca and Burleigh Colonization roads, together with such other important, though shorter lines entering the new country at the most available points will continue to receive my attention. Trusting before many days to have an opportunity of meeting you in your several localities, when I can more fully explain my views.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen,
Very faithfully yours,
W. S. CONGER.

HYMN FOR THE TIMES.

Air,—"Marseilles Hymn."

Freemen of Canada! awake to duty,
Hark! hark! what myriads bid you rise
Your rights and privileges endangered, see,
Behold how great the sacrifice!
Shall Ministerial minions, mischief breeding,
With hireling hosts a mighty band,
Be allowed to desolate the land,
While truth and honesty lie bleeding?
To the polls! to the polls! ye free,
Let your votes recorded be,
For justice and right,
Before wrong and might,
For HAULTAIN and HONESTY.

Now, now, the dangerous storm is rolling,
Which treacherous partisans have raised,
The land is groaning with the burdens,
Imposed by reckless rulers crazed!
And shall we basely view the ruin,
While to the dust is brought our country's pride
And desolations spreading far and wide?
To the polls, &c.

With luxury and pomp surrounded,
The insulting tyrants wickedly dare
To use the gun they hold in sacred trust,
To thwart our claims to justice fair!
Like slaves these yoke-masters would drive us
And set at naught our Constitution good,
But power is still our own to use it,
And while we can let's strike the telling blow.
To the polls! to the polls! ye free,
Let your votes recorded be,
For justice and right,
Before wrong and might,
For HAULTAIN and HONESTY.

AN ADVENTURE.

At the commencement of the present century, a small colony, mostly made up of emigrants from the Highlands of Scotland settled, on the banks of the Albany River, which falls into Hudson's Bay. Though the soil of the valleys contiguous to the river was rich and fertile, yet the winter being long and severe, these people depended somewhat on their skill in hunting and fishing for their subsistence; there being at that time abundance both of game and fish.

Two young kinsmen, both Macdonalds, went out one day into the woods to hunt, each of them armed with his rifle, and his skene dhu (Highland dirk) by his side.—They shaped their course towards a small stream which descended from the mountains to the northeast of the river, on the banks of which they knew there were still a few wild cattle remaining; but they were unsuccessful in their search, and a little before sunset they returned homeward, without having shot anything save a wild turkey or so.—When they least expected it, to their great joy they discovered a cavern which contained a large litter of five half-grown pigs, and neither of the old ones were with them.

This was a prize indeed; so, without loosing a moment, Donald said to the other: "Mack, you go to littlest mae, creep you in and dark to little sows, and I'll be keeping watch at te door."

Mack complied without hesitation, gave his rifle to Donald, unsheathed his skene dhu, and crept into the cavern head foremost; but after he was all out of sight save the brogues, he stopped short and called back:

"But Lord, Donald, pe shoor to keep out te auld ones."

"Ten't you be fearing that man," said Donald.

The cave was deep, but there was abundance of room in the farther end, where Mack, with his sharp skene dhu, now commenced work, when Donald perceived a monstrous wild boar advancing for him, with the fire of rage gleaming from his eyes.—Donald said not a word, for fear of alarming his friend; besides, the savage beast was so hard upon him ere he was aware, that he scarcely had time for any thing; so, setting himself firm and cocking his rifle, he took aim; but, that the ballot might prove the more certainly fatal, he suffered the boar to come within a few paces of him before he fired. He at last drew the trigger, but merciful Heavens!—the weapon missed fire.

There was no time to lose. Donald dashed the piece in the animal's face, turned his back, and fled with the utmost precipitation. The boar pursued him only for a short space, for, having heard the cries of his suffering ones, as he passed the mouth of the den, he hastened back to their rescue.

Most men would have given all up for lost; it was not so with Donald; Mack's life was at stake. As soon as he observed the monster turn back from pursuing him, Donald faced about, and pursued him in his turn; but having, in his fright, run some distance, the boar had got considerably ahead of him. Donald strained every nerve; uttered some piercing cries; and even, for all his haste, did not forget to implore assistance from Heaven. His prayer was short, but pithy—"O Lord! pair Mack! pair Mack!"

In spite of all his efforts, the enraged animal reached the mouth of the den before him, and entered! It was, however, too narrow for him to walk in on all-fours; he was obliged to drag himself in as Mack had done before; and, of course, his hind feet lost their hold of the ground. At this important crisis, Donald overtook him; laid hold of his large, long tail, wrapped it around both his hands, set his feet to the bank, and held back in the utmost desperation.

Mack, who was unconscious of what was going on above ground, wondered why he came to be involved in darkness in a moment. He waited a little while, thinking that Donald was only playing a trick upon him; but the profound obscurity still continuing, as at length bawled out,

"Tonald, man; Tonald! pair's it that'll aye be stopping te light?"

Donald was too much engaged, and too breathless, to make any reply to Mack's question, till the latter, having wished in vain most time for an answer, repeated it in a still louder tone:

"Tonald man; Tonald! I say, what is it that'll aye be stopping te light?"

Donald's answer was very laconic, but very much to the purpose:

"Should te tail break, pan'll be out."

Donald continued the struggle, and soon began to entertain hopes of ultimate success. Where the bear pulled to get in, Donald held back; and when he struggled to get back again Donald set his shoulders to work and pushed him in; and in this position kept him, until he got an opportunity of giving him some deadly stabs with his sheath-knife behind the short rib, which soon terminated his existence.

By this adventure the two Highlanders realized a valuable prize, and secured as much excellent food, that it took them several journeys to convey it home.

COUNT CAVOUR.

As a specimen of the general tone of the British press, we copy the following admirable comment upon Cavour and his work, from The Daily News:—

"A popular British Minister, nowadays, is by no means an idler; but he has no anxieties more serious than those of the rich proprietor of a vast estate. Compare the anxieties of the First Minister who has created Italy, who in courage must be more than a match for a host of enemies, and in wary astuteness more than a match for the craftiest and most overbearing of allies; who conducts three or four departments of state, and who holds all the threads on which the fate of his country hangs. Compare the life of such a man with the easy lives of the statesmen of ancient and settled states, and then compare it with the selfish lives of the common run of all is fellow creatures. Compare his services even with the dangers and fatigues of glorious war, or with the romantic sufferings of irresponsible theorists, and say on which side the highest moral idea is to be found. It is one thing for a man to die fighting with the light of battle in his eyes and the shouts of victory in his ears; and another to be done to death slowly, day by day and hour, by a policy of enforced caution and delay, and by the patient endurance of trials and difficulties hidden in a sleepless breast, while envy and malignity are raging all around. Surely there are other battle-fields than those of war, and Cavour, too, has fallen in his armour, with his face to the foe. The task he proposed to himself might easily, under the circumstances of the case, have daunted a less courageous, inventive, and self-reliant nature. That task was to create out of a multitude of petty states and divided factions a united kingdom; and to do this against the will, and in spite of the armed opposition of a powerful empire, whose influence extend over the greater portion of the Peninsula. At the time when he undertook this work Piedmont was already impoverished, and disheartened. She had an untried constitution, an empty exchequer, a petty military force, and a divided and discontented people. The Government, though sincerely liberal, was weak and even unpopular. It had proclaimed no principles and was utterly destitute of a recognised policy. In ten short years everything has been changed. From a petty and divided state, Piedmont has become a great European power. Victor Emanuel is King of Italy, and the Peninsula in all but free from the Alps to the Adriatic. Italy has at last a name and a place amongst the family of nations. She is free and independent; has recognized principles of government, and a policy of her own, both at home and abroad. But these great results, so rapidly attained, she mainly owes to the great statesman whose sudden removal in the prime of life, in the maturity of its powers, and amidst the realization of his most daring and objects, has filled and still fills the of freedom throughout Europe, with the profoundest grief."

THE HEROIC IN COMMON LIFE.

In a recent lecture, Grace Greenwood gives the following incident, said to have occurred at the time of the burning of a steamer on one of our Western lakes. It is one among a thousand of the heroisms a day which reveal the heroic in common life. "Among the few passengers, whose courage and perseverance of mind approximated to all the horrors of that night was a mother who succeeded in saving two children by means of a floating settee. For hours, all help came, she cheered and comforted the shivering, frightened, little creatures, sustaining herself meanwhile in the water by merely resting her chin on the frail support. This mother related that once, as they were floating near the burning wreck, a man swam towards them, looking spent and desperate. Seeing him about to grasp the settee, she cried, "O, do not take it away from my poor little children!" The man made no answer, but the appeal struck home, for by the light of the flames she could see that his face was convulsed as with a fierce struggle between the mighty instincts of nature, and something better and nobler. It was but a moment. He threw up his arms with a groan of renunciation, flung himself over backwards and went down."

.....Which is the smallest bridge in the world? The bridge of the nose.

.....A shock from the shock of an earthquake must be a rare curiosity.

.....'Tis a misfortune for a man to have a crooked nose, for he has to follow it

.....Who is a very unpopular officer with some of the ladies? General Housework.

.....A country girl, coming from the city, was told by a cousin that she looked as fresh as a daisy kissed with dew. "Well, it wasn't any fellow by that name, but it was Steve Jones that kissed me. I told him that every one in town would find it out."

SIR HENRY SMITH ON THE ISSUES.

Sir Henry Smith, late Speaker to the Assembly has issued an address to the Electors of Frontenac, in which, contrary to the expectations of many, but much to the credit of his judgment, he comes boldly out in Opposition to the Ministry. The influence of this unexpected conversion will be felt throughout the country. The address reads:—

Having during the last Parliament been elected to the highest position which could be conferred upon me as your member, the dissolution of the House places me again at your disposal, and I appeal to you for a renewal of that confidence which, for upwards of 20 years past, you have so generously entrusted to me.

The post which I have so lately occupied of presiding over so distinguished a body as the Commons of Canada, has of necessity prevented me from taking that active part in the politics of the country which, otherwise, I might have done had I continued a member of the government, in which I held the office of Solicitor General, which, since my resignation, has been filled by my gentleman who held at the same time a seat in Parliament.

There are at the present time many questions of serious importance, which it is right your Representative should express his opinions upon, and, as I have never fought under false colours, I shall give you mine upon each and every one of them.

You are aware that by the last census the population of Upper over Lower Canada is in excess to the extent of about 265,-000 people, a fact itself which is sufficient to call for a re-adjustment of the Representation in Parliament. At present you have constituencies in Upper Canada numbering upwards of 40,000: one, in fact, of 96,000, yet this large constituency has but one member, whilst the same number of persons in Lower Canada are represented by nine members in the Legislative Assembly. The principle of Representation based upon Population is so just in itself that the people will insist, and the Parliament will be compelled to grant it. A question of paramount importance is the endowment of University College, by which all the advantages of that institution are concentrated at Toronto to the manifest injury of all other parts of Upper Canada which do not participate in the endowment. I am in favor of legislation on this subject, with a view of doing justice to all classes of the people.

The administration of Mr. Hincks left a debt upon the country of about $15,000, guaranteed in favor of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I regret to say that the Province has been called upon to pay the interest, some $900,000 per annum, on this large sum; and any government should be cautious in giving further advances to a company unable to meet its engagements, and which has not been conducted on that prudent and economical manner which, considering the large amount of Provincial interest involved, was so very necessary.

The present administration has been making further advances to this company, without the consent of the people or their representatives in Parliament, and the consequence has not only been serious to our finances, but a principle has been established which is subversive of all good government, namely, the spending of the public money without the sanction of Parliament being obtained.

It is time which to be feared that the present administration, which, at one time was all powerful, has lost its own self respect, and trusted more to the chances of a Parliamentary vote than the adhesion to these principles upon which it was originally formed.

The taxes upon the people have been largely increased to meet the large amount of indebtedness in which the country is involved, and economy and retrenchment are required instead of advancing and loading the public moneys to corporations which have neither the means nor intention of repaying them.

Notwithstanding responsible Government has been conceded in this country the present administration has retained within its ranks a Cabinet Minister who has been defeated no less than three times by three several constituencies in Upper Canada; and if it was necessary that this gentleman should resign his seat in the Cabinet when [illegible] now [illegible] a new contest, he has been defeated by an honest farmer in the constituency which he sought to represent.

Governments are not to be carried on for the benefit of any set or number of individuals but for the good of the whole community. Has the present Government been so conducted? Let me ask you, have the Conservatives who for so many years past have supported the present party in power, been the recipients of public patronage or office? The administration appears to have been based on the political disfranchisement or bankruptcy of the parties who have obtained it. No regard is had to past services or merit, and, in fact, the administration has for a long time shown nothing but imbecility, want of administrative ability, and has thought more of retaining itself in office than the public welfare!

If the people of Upper Canada are prepared to sustain a government which when a Bill is presented to Parliament to base the Representation of the people upon Population, refuses to allow it to be read or printed, but when a bill which declares that "No person shall hereafter be employed in any of the Public Offices or Departments of the Province, who is not versed in two languages, English and French, in a sufficient degree to fulfil the duties of the office," and "that the employees or officers now incumbent shall continue to hold their offices, but they shall not be capable of promotion to any higher grade or office unless they shall have previously acquired a sufficient knowledge of the English and French language" is not only permitted to be read a first and second time, and its principles thereby admitted, then I can only say to you, that it is no wonder we are said to be under French domination, and we have been basely betrayed by those whose duty it was to defend our rights and interests as Britons and Freemen.

For myself, personally, I have to say that my principles are unchanged. I am a true and liberal conservative, and will advocate economy and retrenchment in every branch of the Public Service.

Since my last election it will be found that the County of Frontenac and its interests have not been neglected. And I hope that my gratitude for your past favours will continue so long as the Almighty shall grant me life and health to acknowledge them.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your Faithful Servant & Friend,
HENRY SMITH.

IMPORTANT.

Richmond, Va., June 26.

It is reported that the Maryland Legislature has passed an ordinance of secession. It is said to have been passed in secret session.

THE ROAD TO PROVINCIAL BANKRUPTCY.

The following statements, taken from the published Public Accounts, laid before the Legislative Assembly, will forcibly exhibit the march of these Provinces on the road to Bankruptcy, under the present Government. So sure as the sun will rise to-morrow, so sure will financial ruin be our portion, unless a change is made, in the extravagant system of governing the country.

Nothing could more forcibly demonstrate the reckless manner in which the finances of the country have been administered by the Coalition Government, than these few simple figures, showing the annual expenditure of the country, from the year 1854 to the present time, the year be it remembered, in which the Coalition Government was inaugurated.

Like a barometer it shows a political atmosphere, which cannot be mistaken.—In view of this practical result of the working of our Coalition Ministry, shall we be wrong in stating that Coalitions are rank poisons to our body politic, and that it is the duty of every citizen to do all in his power to extinguish the abominable nuisance that is preying upon the very vitals of the country. We must either strangle the political hybrid, or suffer financial ruin, we have no option.

The following is the statement to which we refer, it is called the "Statement of Income and Expenditure of the Consolidated Fund." It does not give the entire Income and Expenditure of the Province, for instance, the ordinary Income and Expenditure of the Province for the year 1860, was much more than exhibited in the statement that follows. The income being $8,115,-725.31c, and the Expenditure $8,884,518 66c.

	Income.	Expenditure.
1854.....	$6,088,110....	$4,171,941.
1855.....	4,870,166....	4,779,522.
1856.....	5,989,542....	5,143,624.
1857.....	5,352,796....	5,892,942.
1858.....	4,929,709....	5,433,274.
1859.....	6,248,679....	6,099,570.
1860.....	7,047,930....	7,536,179.

The Expenditure for 1851 was $3,050,-449, and in 1861 $8,884,518 66c! mark the difference.

So ends the first step on the road to Provincial Bankruptcy.

Our next statement will show the progressive increase of the Public Debt. The statement does not include all the liabilities of the Province, as there are some charged to special funds, which will increase the amount at the end of 1860 to about seventy million dollars!

Statement of the Public Debt from the year 1851 to 1860:—

1850	Existing Debt.	$18,782,586
1851.....		20,681,472
1852.....		22,355,413
1853.....		29,922,752
1854	The birth of the Coalition	38,351,833
1855.....		45,835,217
1856.....		48,757,619
1857.....		52,334,911
1858.....		54,892,405
1859.....		54,142,044
1860.....		58,294,469

We append the following to show the actual amount of the whole debt on the 1st January, 1861, the foregoing figures being merely the amount of the funded debt:—

Funded debt.....	$58,292,469
Special funds.....	4,450,143
Seigniorial Compensation, 1859,	2,400,000
Upper Canada offset,.....	2,400,000
Lower Canada L. F. D.'s yet to issue.....	1,597,460
Montreal Seminary.....	140,000
Lower Canada Township,...	580,900
Montreal Harbor Debt....	680,000
Due Glyn Mills & Co on 31st Dec., 1860.....	169,660
Due Glyn Mills & Co, and B. B. & Co.....	283,085
	$70,359,823

It thus appears that the present Government have in the short space of six years run up the Provincial Debt from $29,922,-732 to over $70,000,000—a fact which should seal their fate with every reflecting elector in the Province.

From the above statements we have the following practical results of Coalition rule, viz:—

Expenditure in 1851.....	$ 3,050,449
Expenditure of the Coalition rule in 1860.....	8,884,518
do., after Coalition rule in 1860, about.....	70,000,000

Oh! rare glorious Coalition, thy days are numbered, no political juggulery can save thee from the effect of these inexorable figures. Mouth Bloodsuckers, Cormorants and Chisellers, for the end of thy reign approacheth, these Public Accounts have tolled thy death knell.

PLAIN FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.

The following startling statements are made in a handbill circulated over the country. We believe they are only too correct, and but samples of the way public affairs have been managed in Canada. There is no question that Canada—owing to almost unexampled corruption,—is fast drawing towards financial ruin and bankruptcy; and it will require the efforts of all the honest men in it, of all origins, creeds, and parties, to arrest its downward progress:—

"The ordinary expences of the Government of Canada have risen from $998,000 in the year 1853 to double that sum, or two millions, in 1860.

"The public debt has risen from less than Twenty-three millions in 1853, to Seventy millions in 1860.

"The annual disbursements under all heads has risen from Four millions in 1853, to Nine millions in 1860.

"The excess of expenditure over income has risen since 1853 from a few thousands to one, two, three, and now reaches Four millions."—Witness.

GRAND TRUNK REPORT.

We are asked to correct some blunderling in the printing of the Grand Trunk Commissioners' Report, by giving the figures in the way they should have appeared, viz:—

REVENUE ACCOUNT.

Revenue Suspense Account, cr't charged to Revenue on transactions previous to the 1st July, 1860,.....	$2,208,241 20
Balance at debit of Revenue Acc't for half-year ending 31st Dec., 1860,.....	10,440 57
	$2,200,701 63
Balance at Credit of Revenue, in Accounts of 30th June, 1860, as audited,.....	$1,472,113 60
Balance carried to General Acc't, being the debt against Revenue Account on 31st Dec., 1860,...	724,588 75
	$2,200,701 63

On this statement we find bound to make a few remarks. Its meaning is, that an accumulation amounting to Two Millions Three Hundred and Eighty-six Thousand Dollars, which should have been charged to "Revenue Account," as the items were paid, have been placed to a "Suspense Account," so as to make the revenue appear flourishing. This enormous amount is chiefly the result of the Grand St. Lawrence and Atlantic Railway, the Mr. Cayley celebrated bargain by which the stockholders that Railway was relieved from about 53 cent. to 113, if the receipts of the line were right. It thus appears that after deducting all the gains of the road there is actually a deficiency on Revenue Account of nearly a Million of dollars! That is, the road has not paid one cent of its construction, nor any interest thereon, but goes behind, thanks to its extravagant and dishonest management, about a million dollars in running expenses! Is there not need for a thorough change here?—Montreal Witness.

The Law of Elections.

WHO MAY VOTE AT ELECTIONS.

The following persons, and no other persons, being of the full age of twenty-one years, and subjects of Her Majesty by birth or naturalization, and not being disqualified under the preceding sections, or otherwise by law prevented from voting, shall, if duly registered or entered on the revised and certified list of voters according to the provisions of this Act, be entitled to vote at Elections of Members to serve in the Legislative Council or Legislative Assembly of this Province, that is to say:

1. Every male person entered on the then last Assessment-Roll, revised, corrected and in force in any City or Town entitled to send a Member or Members to the Legislative Assembly, as the owner or as the tenant or occupant of real property therein as bounded for municipal purposes, of the assessed value of three hundred dollars or upwards, or of the assessed yearly value of thirty dollars or upwards, —— or who is entered on such last revised and corrected Assessment-Roll of any Township, Parish or Place, as the owner, tenant or occupant of any real property which is within the limits of any such City or Town for the purposes of Representation, but not for municipal purposes, of the assessed value of two hundred dollars at least, or of the assessed yearly value of twenty dollars, or upwards,—shall be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Council the Electoral Division of which such City or Town forms a part,—and shall also be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Assembly the said City or Town; subject always to the provisions hereinafter contained;

2. Every male person entered on the then last Assessment-Roll, revised, corrected and in force in any Parish, Township, Town, Village or place, not being within any City or Town entitled to send a Member or Members to the Legislative Assembly, as the owner, tenant or occupant of real property of the assessed value of two hundred dollars or upwards,—or of the yearly assessed value of twenty dollars or upwards, shall be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Council the Electoral Division of which such Parish, Township, Town, Village or place forms a part,—and shall also be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Assembly the Electoral Division in which such Parish, Township, Town, Village or place is included: subject always to the provisions hereinafter contained;

3. Whenever two or more persons, whether as being partners in business, joint tenants or tenants in common, or par indivis, are entered on such Assessment-Roll as aforesaid, as the owners of any real property, or as tenants or occupants thereof, each of such persons shall be permitted to vote and to be entered on the list of voters in respect of such property, if the value of his part or share be sufficient to entitle him to vote at any Election for Members to represent in the Legislative Council or Assembly the Electoral Division within which such property is situate, if such property were assessed in his individual name; —Except that if the property be held by any body corporate, no one of the Members thereof shall be entitled to vote or be entered on the list of voters, in respect of such property; And provided that in Upper Canada such persons, as in this sub-section mentioned, must establish their right before the Court of Revision or County Judge according to the provisions of the Assessment Law as subsequently amended, on the Assessment-Roll of any Township, Parish or Place, as the owner, tenant or occupant of any real property which is within the limits of any such City or Town for the purposes of Representation, but not for municipal purposes, of the assessed value of two hundred dollars at least, or of the assessed yearly value of twenty dollars, or upwards,—shall be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Council the Electoral Division of which such City or Town forms a part,—and shall also be entitled to vote at any Election of a Member to represent in the Legislative Assembly the said City or Town; subject always to the provisions hereinafter contained;

4. And when any real property, although wholly within the same County, Riding or Electoral Division, nevertheless lies partly within the limits of one of the Polling places opened and kept therein, and partly within the limits of another of the said polling places, the person entitled to vote as the owner or occupant of such property may vote at either of the said polling places at his discretion.

THE LAW FOR THE PREVENTION OF BRIBERY.

The law for the prevention of bribery at elections, it will be observed, is very stringent. We advise our friends to bear in mind the following extracts from the Act, and to keep a watchful eye on the conduct of electioneering agents and canvassers:

The following persons shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and punishable accordingly:—

Every person who shall directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give, lend, or agree to give or lend, or shall offer, or promise to procure, or endeavour to procure any money or valuable consideration to or for any voter, or to or for any person, in order to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting, or shall corruptly do any such act as aforesaid, on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any election.

Every person who shall directly or indirectly by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give, or offer, promise, or promise to procure, or endeavour to procure any office, place, or employment to or for any voter, or any person on behalf of voters, or to any person to refrain from voting, or corruptly do any such act on account of votes, having voted or refrained, &c.

Every person who shall make any gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement as aforesaid, to or for any person in order to induce such persons to procure the return of any person to serve in Parliament or the vote of any voter at the election.

Every person who shall upon or in consequence of any such gift, loan, &c. procure the return of any person or the vote of any voter.

Every person who shall, pending or pay or cause to be advanced, &c. any money to or for the use of any other person, with the intent that such money or any part thereof shall be expended in bribery at any election, or who shall knowingly pay or cause to be paid any money to any person in discharge or repayment of any money wholly or in part of any money expended in bribery at any election.

And such persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who shall sue for the same with full costs of suit.

The following persons shall also be guilty of bribery:—

Every voter corrupting to vote for money, gift, loan, &c.

Every voter who, after such election, receives money, gift, loan, &c. for voting or refraining from voting.

And such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to forfeit two hundred dollars, &c.

The hiring of vehicles to carry voters to the polls, &c. is illegal as well as to candidates, and any elector who shall so hire is disqualified from voting at such elections, and liable to forfeit the sum of thirty dollars.

Persons using violence or intimidation at elections are guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to a fine of two hundred dollars.

Contracts even for lawful expenses arising out of elections are void.

THE ELECTION DAYS.

We hope that the law for the closing of Houses of Public Entertainment during the two days of Polling, will be rigidly enforced. If so, everything will pass over quietly and without any of those disgraceful scenes which have too often enacted in our country during the excitement of the election periods. Let the friends of law and good order see to it.

Con. Stat. of Canada, Chap. 6, Sec. 82. "Every hotel, tavern, and shop in which spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks are ordinarily sold, shall be closed during the two days appointed for polling in the wards or municipalities in which the polls are held, in the same manner as it should be on Sunday during Divine Service, and no spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks shall be sold or given during the said period, under a penalty of one hundred dollars against the keeper thereof, if he neglects to close it, and under a like penalty if he sells or gives any spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks, as aforesaid.—22 Vic., Chap. 82, Sec. 13."—(Copied from Con. Stat.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

The following section dispels all doubt as to which roll should be used at the coming election:—

No person shall be admitted to vote at any Election of a Member to serve in the Legislative Council or Assembly, unless his name appears upon the LIST THEN LAST MADE AND CERTIFIED; —and no question of qualification shall be raised at any such Election, except to ascertain whether the party tendering his vote is the same party intended to be designated in the alphabetical list aforesaid.

The Examiner.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1861.

TO OUR READERS.

We appear one day earlier this week in order to lay before our readers and the public all the information possible about the elections. We will issue again on Saturday evening, and our next week's regular issue will appear immediately on the arrival of full returns from all the polling places in this County.

THE CONTEST.

Present indications point to a glorious victory on Tuesday and Wednesday next for COL. HAULTAIN and the friends of good government. But we must caution our friends against settling into a sanguine contentment; the enedesperate exertions are being made to secure success for their candidate; no means however base are too bad for them to adopt. Let us remember that DUTY calls us to action, and that, as was nobly repeated at the hustings: Canada "expects every man to do his duty." The issues are fairly before the Electors; this is no time to be neutral. The dividing line is clear,—on the one hand: honesty, integrity, and good government; on the other self-interest before principle.—Need we add another word? A few days more and it will be seen in this case whether good old Peterboro County will have sustained its well-earned [reputation. We need not cast a doubt on the result; we could not if we felt inclined, so cheering do the accounts reach us from all parts of the country. But exertion, unceasing exertion, must be made by the friends of Reform, not merely to defeat the enemy, for that is morally certain, but to deal such a blow, that dishonesty, political and personal, will never again show its head among us.

☞ The Review, nettled at the result of the nomination, tries to account for the great excess of hands for Col. Haultain by stating that the electors did not understand the Sheriff when he called for the show of hands for Conger. He must find a more plausible story than that before he can be believed. As to "Mr. Miller's Lumbermen" the statement is an untruth, the only "lumbermen" brought there were some 20 river hands drummed up by the Congerites to hold up their hands for Conger, which they did by holding up both, every one of them.

☞ Notices of Cricket Match between Cobourg and Peterboro' against Toronto; Union School examination; Mr. Fiddle's Concert, unavoidably crowded out.

THE NOMINATION.

Colt Haultain has the Show of Hands!

The attendance at the nomination could not have been less than 1,000 persons, and it is generally acknowledged that at no similar meeting in this county was ever the same interest manifested by the electors. The arrangements for and on the hustings were good, and the platform was located on a most advantageous place.

Shortly after 12 o'clock, noon, the Writ was read, and the Returning Officer, Jas. Hall, Esq., Sheriff, called on the electors to chose a candidate to represent them in Parliament.

John Harvey, Esq., of Smith, proposed W. S. Conger, Esq., and Henry Fowlds, Esq., of Hastings, seconded the nomination.

R. Nicholls, Esq., of Peterboro', moved the nomination of Col. F. W. Haultain, seconded by Wm. Elliott, Esq., of Smith. No further nominations being made, Mr. Conger, according to agreement between the candidates, first took the stand to address the meeting.

Mr. Conger stepped forward and said that as it was the first time he had appeared before the electors since the last election he felt it necessary to explain his present views, and the course he intended to pursue if elected. Firstly, there was the question of Representation by Population, which he thought could not fairly be called a party question; Conservatives and Reformers alike in Upper Canada were united in demanding the principle. It had been charged against him that he had voted against the measure; he could show it to be otherwise, (read from Journals of Assembly, 1856.) It had also been charged against him that he had supported the Ministry too strongly; he would like to know what would have been done to our back country had he not given a generous support to the Ministry. (Cries of Oh! Oh! and hear.) A great deal of noise had been made over the money given to the Grand Trunk; what would we be without the great concern? (swindle if you chose to call it); he regarded it as one of the institutions of our country, and rather than it should sink he would have the country give it three times as much as it had received. He was opposed, however, to any connection between the Government and the Grand Trunk, and he was glad to say that the last minister who had any connection with the Grand Trunk direction, Hon. Mr. Rose, Commissioner of Public Works, had resigned. He thought he could without boasting, claim credit for his great efforts in opening up the vast country in the rear, which not many years ago, was only a howling wilderness. He left a lucrative situation in that building (pointing to the Court House) to serve this County in Parliament with the one idea, viz: that of opening up the Bobcaygeon tract, and although he had been accused of personal motives in so doing, he could challenge any man to prove that he had received the value of a 6d. for his labor. He was in favor of a Bankrupt Law, same just measure by which an arrangement could be come to whereby the honest debtor might be relieved of his liabilities. He was in favor of retrenchment in the expenditure of public money. He would advocate a re-adjustment of the tariff, and thought the scheme as original one; the duty on articles of every day use, such as tea and sugar should be removed, and placed on luxuries,—wines whiskey, rum, and gin, for instance. He was especially in favor of lessening the duty on articles entering by the St. Lawrence. As to the Finances of the Province the sum of our public debt had been greatly overstated by Gen. Brown and his party. It had been stated to be $70,000,000, he was prepared to show that it was not more than $58,000,000,—a large debt, certainly, but it might be larger. He was greatly in love with the country, with the Union, with the Constitution, and with the people, and to the British throne;—he was prepared to wield the sword, if necessary, in defence of his country. Before he concluded he would refer to a personal matter, which was disagreeable to him, but he thought so much had been said about it he was called on to refer to it. He had been acquitted by the Court of Chancery of the charge (the £1,500 affair) and if he had been the greatest scoundrel that ever escaped the gallows, surely a discharge by the highest court in the land should be enough to put a stop forever to the accusations of his enemies. He was at a loss to know how a man in Chancellor Blake's position could express himself in the way he had done, and it sounded to him very much as if the judgment had been given in a prejudiced spirit.

Col. Haultain rose amidst deafening cheers. He said he felt himself at a disadvantage in appearing before the electors of Peterboro', being comparatively a stranger among them, but that disadvantage was being gradually overcome. He had one advantage over his opponent, viz: that he had no supposed delinquencies to answer for. He did not come forward unsolicited to take the place he now stood in; he had done so at the solicitation of a very large and influential section of the electors of the County. Although a stranger in Peterboro' he was not a stranger to the Province and its interests. He had lived nine years in Canada, eight of which he spent in different sections of the country in Her Majesty's service, as an officer of artillery. Soldiers are not participators in politics affairs but are generally careful observers, and that enables them to judge more fairly and impartially than those who take an active part in them.—That is the reason of which he had formed his opinions. He was impressed with the fact that what Canada wanted most was upright, honest men to conduct the government; men who would look more after the interests of the country, and less after their own; it is notorious that individuals had gone into the Government poor and come out rich. His opponent, Mr. Conger held many views in common with himself; the question of Representation by Population for example. But he differed widely with his opponent as to the means whereby the measure could be secured; his opponent would support men in office who have defiantly told the people of Upper Canada that Representation by Population would never be granted, and no matter what the excess of population in this section of the country could be the measure would not even be considered for 10 years yet;—he (Col. H.) was opposed to a Ministry that denied us our just rights, and which told [illegible] and insulted us as in the case of Cartier's comparison of the unrepresented 331,000 Upper Canadians to stinking codfish in the Bay Chaleurs. Herein lay the difference between him and his opponent. The present ministry had lost his confidence in consequence of their unconstitutional acts; he held that violation of the constitution was a very serious and a very grave matter. The retention of Mr. Morrison in office after having been rejected by three constituencies; the disbursing of public monies without the consent of Parliament as in the Grand Trunk advances, &c., were cases in point, and should be condemned by all lovers of good Government. Mr Conger had intimated that unless your member would sell his support to the Government he need expect no money for improvements in the Back country. If that did not mean that the Government used the money for their own purposes it meant just nothing.—It must indeed be a very bad government that resorted to such means to keep themselves in office. If elected, the subject of emigration would receive his most careful attention; he would be happy to see many of the people of the old countries who work for a miserable pittance to sustain life, brought to settle on our broad acres, and become participators in our comforts and plenty. The Book of Inspiration tells us that "Righteousness exalteth a Nation;" he had faith in the country being yet ruled righteously, and the government that so ruled it would receive his support. He would conclude with the sentiment of England's most renowned sailor, that Canada "expects every man this day to do his duty." (Prolonged cheers, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs.)

Both Candidates were questioned on the subject of the University Reform. The answers were very similar.

An elector asked Mr. Conger a question, when that gentleman said if the brain of the person asking for explanation was so obtuse that he could not understand the subject, he had better go home and learn. (Murmurs)

The Returning Officer then called for a show of hands, which on being taken was largely in favor of Col. Haultain. Many claimed that the vote was three to one against Conger. After the Returning Officer had declared the result, the proposer and seconder of Mr. Conger demanded a poll.

Three cheers for Col. Haultain were given, after which the Colonel thanked the electors for their expression of confidence, and hoped that the result of the polling would prove as satisfactory as the nomination.

THE ELECTIONS.

The first contest in Upper Canada was a crushing defeat to the Ministry. The Postmaster General was defeated in West Northumberland, notwithstanding all the means brought to bear in his favor, money included. At the close of the polls the vote stood:—

	Cockburn.	Smith.
Cobourg,.....	257	413
Hamilton.....	438	558
Haldimand,.....	357	255
South Monaghan,.....	54	106
Alnwick,.....	77	64
Total,.....	1,183	1,156

Majority for Cockburn,....27

John A. Macdonald has been returned for Kingston, after a struggle which he will not forget till the end of his life time. Mr. Mowat has been triumphantly returned for South Ontario. In West Durham, Mr. Munro was elected by a sweeping majority. Mr. Isaac Buchanan has been returned for Hamilton. We have not full returns for Victoria, but there is little doubt that John Cameron has been defeated. John Sanfield Macdonald has been returned for Cornwall, and Mr. A. P. Macdonald has carried Glengary triumphantly. In Brockville, Mr. Sherwood's majority after the first day's polling was 81. Glorious old Kent has returned her faithful representative, Mr. McKellar. Mr. Darcy McGee was elected for the Eastern Division of Montreal by acclamation.

A RIDE ON THE RAIL.

We were right in our prediction that the [illegible] didate for this County, if defeated at home. On Saturday morning a special train (Grand Trunk engine and car) bearing the defeated Postmaster General, arrived by the Cobourg road, at 9¼ o'clock. When the news spread abroad the greatest excitement prevailed. We understand that a consultation was held among the "faithful," the result of which deliberation evidently was that poor Sidney had better go home again, and that it would be folly to run him here. Conger's chances were small, but Smith's were beautifully less. So Sidney's face was not seen at the nomination, and what happened to him after that, few knew and still fewer cared. There is now no doubt as to whether Peterborough was reserved as a place of refuge for the Postmaster General, in the event of defeat in his own constituency; but the Ministry are in too bad odor here to palm off one of their number upon us; they must seek a more congenial atmosphere; plants of that genera cannot flourish here, and whatever degree of success Mr. Conger has met with has been from other causes than his Ministerial notions.

PROGRESS.

The latest news by the Times acquaints us with the pleasing intelligence that the Bill in the House of Commons for the Abolition of the Church Rates was only lost by the casting vote of the Speaker.

We chronicle the fact as indicating the progress of public opinion in the right direction, and have no doubt when it is again brought forward it will pass, whereby one of the most odious of the imposts of the 19th century will have passed away.

It is sad to think that while the mother country is progressing in the correction of abuses connected with church and state, we as Canadians are retrograding while advocating state pay for denominational purposes—vide the Methodist Conference Memorial to the Provincial Legislature, 1861.

☞ It is an ascertained fact that the most corrupt practices are being resorted to by some of Mr. Conger's friends to induce parties to vote for their man. We need mention neither names nor circumstances; suffice it, information of a definite character of bribery has transpired, and clues to others have been found. As another favorable manner of persuasion to vote for Conger we are told that a certain hotel is travelling from house to house threatening all sorts of evils to delinquents, if they do not vote for his man. These gentry are watched, and they may rest assured that their acts will fall on their own heads with a terrible weight whatever be the result of the election.

THE £1,500 AFFAIR.

Desirous that our readers should have the opportunity of judging fairly, and forming their own conclusions, we laid before them, without comment, the judgments by Chancellor Blake and Vice-Chancellor Esten. All we asked was that our readers should read both and judge for themselves, but the Review is not satisfied with this; its ideas of fair play are somewhat different. That oracle speaks and the right of private judgement has departed. What the Review is pleased to state must be true; yet some secret sense of fallibility, or error, induces the editor to bring forward four other persons to vouch for his veracity. We take this as a sign that he has at last discovered his great weakness, and trust that in future he will publish nothing wonderful without getting it similarly verified. We must however tell the four individuals who declare the Review's statements correct, that we have not unlimited faith in them. Allowing to them all the respect we think they deserve, we still claim the right for ourselves and our readers to judge for themselves. We have the audacity even to maintain that we have infinitely more faith in the ability and sound judgement of Chancellor Blake than in the capacity and judgment of the whole five, either individually or collectively. Moreover, their position as partisan supporters of Mr. Conger gives their minds a bias, and disqualifies them from giving an impartial verdict in the matter, or even stating the facts fairly.

With all respect for their good intentions, therefore, we shall lay before our readers the most important conclusions at which the Chancellor arrives after fair consideration of the evidence.

The first is: that the transaction between Conger & Whitmarsh was a plain fraud upon the Township of Wolford. 2nd. That it was a gross fraud upon the Government. 3rd. That both had an interest in denying an agreement to divide the funds; and therefore that though Conger & Whitmarsh differed widely as to the virtual disposition of the £1,500, Conger swearing that the whole was paid to Whitmarsh; and Whitmarsh, on the contrary, swearing that he only received £765, he (the Chancellor) "inclines on the whole to agree with Whitmarsh," and gives his reasons. 4th. That when Conger swears: "and I say I know not whether the said sum of £1,500 sterling was in reality due to the Government" he states (in the Chancellor's opinion) a WILFUL UNTRUTH! 5th. That Whitmarsh's receipt for the £1,500 was given for a purpose, being necessary to the protection of both parties; and for which purpose it was so used. In conclusion the Chancellor states: "upon the whole I am inclined to the opinion that Whitmarsh has stated the truth." These be it observed are the conclusions arrived at, after hearing the evidence on both sides, by the highest legal authority.

It is true that a different judgment has been given by Vice-Chancellor Esten because he thinks there is no conclusive evidence that Conger did receive any part of the money; and in fact this judge seems doubtful whether, even if the evidence had been sufficient, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, seeing that they had agreed to pay the £1,500 in order to get the debentures. But the Vice-Chancellor is far from satisfied with the transaction, and, it will be observed, stated: "In conclusion I must reiterate that the question is not whether the transaction I have been canvassing can be justified on public grounds, but whether the Premier, Conger and Whitmarsh, having been jointly concerned in a transaction which in a public point of view, may be of questionable propriety, one or two of these parties can be made liable to the other for their or his share of the transaction."

Here, then, both judges, while they agree on the question of immorality differ in their legal conclusions on the question of evidence chiefly. And after all, and more especially at present, the question of morality is all we have to deal with. It seems to us that the whole affair, in so far as Conger and the public are concerned, is very simple and may be stated in a very few words. The Town of Peterborough has been fraudulently deprived of £1,500 stg. We say fraudulently because though the Council agreed to lose that amount, they did so on the representation that the debentures could not be obtained for less, being led to believe that that amount was due to the Government. Now Conger and Whitmarsh were the parties who managed the transaction, and there being a fraud in connection with it, the question to decide is whether Conger or Whitmarsh, or both, are guilty. What is the evidence? Very scanty, it must be confessed. Conger swears he paid Whitmarsh the whole, and produces his receipt. Whitmarsh swears he only received the half. Any further evidence is purely circumstantial. Where, in the direct evidence this contradiction is so flat, the parties equally respectable, and no possibility of checking their evidence, it is simply impossible for any human tribunal to decide who tells the truth. The Chancellor says he inclines on the whole to agree with Whitmarsh, because "his evidence appears to be more truthful than Conger's."

Two things are certain: Either Conger or Whitmarsh, or both, are guilty of perjury, and the town has lost £1,500 stg. between them—though Conger may not in the circumstances be proved legally guilty, yet the circumstantial evidence against him is of such a nature that in the minds of unprejudiced men, there is a strong moral suspicion of guilt; so strong that we don't consider the electors justified in giving him their confidence or support, or warranted in again placing him in the position of their representative in Parliament.

We have now done with the £1,500 affair, and shall not return to it again unless the Review wishes further discussion.—There is only one thing more we shall refer to:—The Review on Friday last adjured Mr. Conger's opponents to cease their opposition altogether if they had no other grounds of opposition than the £1,500 affair; and, in answer to the challenge, we then, somewhat reluctantly, published Mr. Hill's case,—the facts of which, being known to many respectable parties in town, and to a certain extent patent to the public in the public records, could not be disputed. We observe that the truth of our statement is denied by a person who shows clearly that he knows nothing whatever of the matter. Should Mr. Conger, or any one by his authority, deny what we have stated, we shall publish proofs, sufficient to convince the most incredulous.

THE HILL SWINDLE.

It must be admitted that Mr. Conger's conduct in the £1,500 affair forfeited for him all confidence of the public to transact business for them, but we have a case to deal with, more disgraceful if possible, than the missing debentures. About three years ago Mr. Hill, lessee of the Mills at Buckhorn, was applied to by agents of the Government, they representing, that it would be necessary for him to lower the water at his mill until the Locks at Bobcaygeon were built. To this Mr. Hill agreed, with the understanding that he would be compensated by the Government for so doing. When the locks were built and the agreement furnished, Mr. Hill met Mr. W. S. Conger, who represented to him that he was going soon to Toronto, and if he (Hill) wished the money collected he would attend to it. Mr. Hill was only too glad of the chance and was rejoiced at the idea of having the money collected so easily, but lo! he was deemed to disappointment. In a few days Mr. Conger returned but with him no money! Mr. Hill wished the order returned but Mr. Conger in his usual shuffling way put it off from time to time. Finding himself much in need of money Mr. Hill proceeded to the Government department in Toronto, when lo! and behold again, his order was produced, receipted by W. S. Conger! Grieved to the heart by this most shameful treatment he returned to Peterboro when Mr. Conger "made a clean breast of it," but to settle the matter the best way he could then, Mr. Conger gave Mr. Hill a note at three months, which when it matured was dishonored, and afterwards put in suit, when an execution against Conger was had. The result of this most disgraceful transaction was that Mr. Hill was reduced in means to beggary, and left the country. The above is strictly true; the judgment is registered, and may be seen at the Registry Office, and legal gentlemen and private residents in Peterboro' will testify to the correctness of these statements if necessary! Electors! can you vote for a man who can be guilty of such conduct? Stop and consider!!!

THE SMITH O'BRIEN CASE.

At page 397 Journals of Parliament, 1850, is recorded a case which will be found to illustrate the inconsistency of Mr. Conger's votes while he was a member of the Assembly. Let us copy the entire sentence,—here it is:—

Mr. McKenzie moved, seconded by Mr. Bowes, and the question being put, That this House will, to-morrow, resolve itself into a Committee to take into consideration the following Resolution: That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, to grant to Messrs. William Smith O'Brien, formerly Member of the Imperial Parliament, and John Frost, formerly Mayor of Newport, in Wales, the former of whom was convicted of being concerned in the Insurrection in Ireland, in 1848, and the latter being connected with certain Civil Commotions nine years before, in Wales, Her Majesty's most gracious amnesty and forgiveness, and to restore them to their country and to their families, from whom they have been separated during a long period of exile, privation, and severe suffering: That blessed as the British Empire is with peace and tranquility at home and abroad, this House would fain hope that the time has come in which an amnesty for political offences in Ireland and Wales can be safely granted by the Crown.

Among the NAYS we find Messrs Cartier, Atty. Gen. McDonald, Robinson and ☞ Conger! ☜

Electors! will you tolerate such outrageous favoritism? Mr. Cartier is a Lower Canada French ex-rebel, and he was pardoned, but Mr. Smith O'Brien and Mr. John Frost, an Irish and a Welsh rebel, are doomed to endless exile by Mr. Conger and his leaders! O'Brien and Frost were subsequently pardoned, but it was by the Imperial Government, against the wish of the representative of Ministerialism in this County Mr. Conger!

HORRIBLE MURDER.

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL

Map of Upper Canada,

TOGETHER WITH A DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF

N'th & S'th MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONLIN, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority; also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Lines Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the boundaries and names of each County and Township, the great Lakes, Rivers, and principal Mill streams. Tables showing the Variation of Time between each County Seat in Upper Canada from the Magnetic Observatory, Toronto, the Population of each City, Town, County and Township will also be given, with other important and useful information, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be Illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province, executed in the best style of the art.

These will also be given on the above Map an enlarged Plan, in the most minute detail, of the above Townships, showing concessions, lots, and sub-divisions, with the names of the proprietors neatly engraved thereon; also, R and Sections, Churches, School-houses, Mills, Manufactories, Taverns, Inns, &c., together with unembanked streams, Lanes, Inns, &c., together with unembanked streams, gravel, plank and other Roads open to travel, the true Source of rivers and mill streams; also, enlarged Plans of Towns and Villages in the Townships.

The names of all Subscribers, resident owners of farms, will be engraved specially prominent on their respective lots, and the position of their residence indicated; also, the names of Subscribers in the Towns and Villages will be published, with the title, profession, business, &c., of each, thus constituting a complete Rural, Professional, and Mercantile Business Directory.

The publishers being practical engravers, draftsmen, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 48 by 72 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvass, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4 50) payable on delivery.

Other Townships in the County will be canvassed in due time.

CAUTION.—This enterprise in no way connected with that projected by Messrs. Tremaine, of Jefferson County, State of New York.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE County of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

Having been urgently solicited by those representing a large section of the Electors of the County, to become a Candidate at the forthcoming election, I have consented to do so.

I come forward deeply impressed with the responsibility that will attach to any one chosen to represent you at this period of the history of Canada, and I should shrink from the risk of incurring it, had I not learnt that all necessary wisdom is imparted to those who seek it from the All-wise Director of all hearts.

Not having the advantage of a long residence amongst you, it is necessary for me to state briefly my political opinions.

Having borne a Commission in Her Majesty's Service for upwards of 21 years, I need scarcely say that I have imbibed a strong attachment to the British crown and country, and a love of honor, order, and justice.

The former would lead me to resist to the uttermost any attempts of any party to dissever or weaken our connection with the mother country, and the latter would induce me to render justice to all parties and all creeds, and confine my efforts to obtain justice within lawful and constitutional limits.

As regards the prominent questions now before the country, I feel that no ambiguity should be used in expressing my views.

I think it an injustice that Upper Canada should be ruled by a small minority of her representatives, and every constitutional means should be employed to remove this injustice, without inflicting a like injustice on the Eastern section.

Representation by population appears to me common justice to the superiority in numbers and wealth of Upper Canada, and would tend to give us our fair weight in the United Legislature.

I would vote, therefore, for that measure, and wish to see removed from power those who now oppose it.

I wish to see an immediate and complete separation between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway, and should vote that no further aid be given it from the public treasury: Also, that no person connected with the Government of the country should be permitted to hold any official position in its management.

As regards the public finances, I would allow of no excess of expenditure over income, and would retain all disbursements as much as possible in the hands of Parliament.

The commonest principles of political morality demand, that no Minister of the Crown should take advantage of his position as such to benefit himself by pecuniary speculations, and I heartily hope to see the day, when men who so transgress will meet with the condemnation they merit.

Should I be returned as your representative, I need scarcely say that the interests of the County will demand my constant care, and it would give me great pleasure to consult with all parties as to how best to further these interests. The capabilities of the county augur a prosperous future.

A more detailed statement of my opinions, I hope to give you in person.

I should strive to treat with courtesy all who may honestly differ with me; but I hope never to fail in denouncing dishonesty and untruthfulness wherever found.

And may He who overrules all events, further every right endeavour to raise the standard of honor and righteousness in the our country.

I remain,

GENTLEMEN,
Your faithful servant,
FRED. W. HAULTAIN.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT

ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBORO'.

GENTLEMEN,

The time having again arrived when you are called upon to elect a member to represent you in the Legislative Assembly of this Province, I have at the solicitation of a large number of the Electors of this County, consented to offer myself as a candidate for your suffrages.

Twenty years residence among you, chiefly spent in the discharge of arduous and responsible public duties, must I think have afforded you ample opportunity to judge of my fitness to serve you. And the fact of my having at the solicitation of some of you, left a lucrative situation to enter that service—affords sufficient evidence that I have no object to gratify, except an honest pride of being your representative.

The unexpected—though yet but partial success—which has attended my exertions to open a country in rear of us—mainly by large settlement from Ireland—and which at this moment bids fair to become as populous as any portion of Canada, will I think serve to illustrate how much to other but by sending men to Parliament without any higher object than the mere support of Individuals or parties. "Measures, not Men," has ever been my motto, and if I should again be honored with a seat in Parliament, I shall, therefore, be found ready to support a good measure, without reference to the source from which it may emanate.

Although my political opinions are well known to most of you, it may not at this time be amiss to be more than usually explicit upon a few of the important questions now before the County.

First then—Representation by Population, to be for all the Legislative Assembly of our country, is a measure which shall continue to have my support, and I have no hesitation in saying that my adhesion to party will be greatly influenced by the chances it may afford me of carrying this measure.

As a Canadian, strongly imbued with feelings of loyalty and attachment to the British Crown and Government, and believing that our connection with the mother country depends upon the maintainance of the Union between Upper and Lower Canada, I shall resist all attempts, from whatever quarter they may come, to dissolve that Union.

I believe that a Federal Union of all the British Provinces, leaving to each the management of its own internal affairs, would ensure harmony and commercial prosperity amongst ourselves and tend greatly to strengthen British feeling on this continent.

I desire to see all connection between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway removed, and shall oppose further Provincial aid to that enterprise.

I shall oppose any expenditure of the public money without the sanction of Parliament.

I shall urge Retrenchment in the public expenditure, and a reduction of Law costs.

I am in favor of reducing to a nominal rate, the duty upon tea and sugar, when entered by the St. Lawrence.

I am also in favor of such an adjustment of the Tariff between this country and the United States of America, as will place the Manufacturers and Agriculturists of this Province upon a footing of equality with the same class of persons in that country.

I shall support the immediate passing of an equitable bankrupt law, giving protection to debtor and creditor. I entertain serious doubts as to the propriety of longer continuing to Municipal Councils the power of unlimited taxation, and shall consider whether this power may not be safely abridged.

I believe that our local position and great natural resources, if properly developed, will serve to place the Town of Peterboro in the first rank of prosperity and greatness, and I shall, if in a position to do so, use every means in my power to advance its interests.

The Bobcaygeon and Burleigh Colonization roads, together with such other important, though shorter lines entering the new country at the most available points will continue to receive my attention. Trusting before many days to have an opportunity of meeting you in your several localities, when I can more fully explain my views.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen,
Very faithful y yours,
W. S. CONGER.

HAULTAIN

AND HONESTY!

TRIAL FOR MURDER IN MONTREAL.

A MEDICAL MAN SENTENCED TO DEATH.

The trial of Dr. Jean Patterson, for the murder of Olive Savariat, of Jacques-ville, Eastern Townships, by causing an abortion, after occupying three days in the Court of Queen's Bench, Montreal, closed on Thursday last. The Jury, after being out for an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. The report in the Herald then proceeds:—

After a pause, the Clerk of the Crown, addressing the still motionless prisoner, inquired if he had anything to urge why sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

Patterson slowly turned his head and addressing the speaker, said, with slow and faltering accents, "I don't think there is anything to be said. I don't think it would prove of self service. Perhaps if I had time and opportunity I might offer some explanations, but they would be of no use. They would not alter the sentence. I throw myself upon the mercy of the Court."

The crier then made proclamation, enjoining silence under penalty of death was being passed, under pain of imprisonment.

Judge Aylwin then slowly and impressively addressing the prisoner, said, "In charging the jury who have tried you and found guilty of murder, it was necessary to state under the peculiar circumstances of your case, that the law was so clear as to leave no doubt as to the precise extent of your offence, and that it clearly came within the definition of murder. The sole question which the jury had to decide was whether the death of the unfortunate girl, Olive Savariat, was the result of your wicked [illegible] direct. On this question they have pronounced their verdict, and no man who has been present at the trial can say but that it is the verdict which he, if he had been on his oath, would have been impelled to give. The facts are so strong as to leave no room for consideration. It is a strange thing that you should have undertaken such a wicked deed,—for at best it was a wicked deed,—by medicines and other means, of taking the child from that unfortunate girl—of depriving that child of its existence, at the same time that you were imperilling the life of the girl herself. In your case something strange has occurred. You have brought up no witness as to your character, but on the other hand, one of the witnesses was obliged, in the course of the cross-examination, to state that your character in the neighbourhood was indisputably bad; and that you were in the habit of selling your services for this abominable purpose. A man of your age, and one assuming, too, to be a healer of suffering humanity to lend yourself for filthy, bireling lucre to such a service! A practice which, if generally followed in any neighbourhood, would convert that locality into a hell upon earth. Your crime, if imitated, would have the most disastrous results which it is possible to suppose. Bad as war is, your crime would produce worse results. Humanity shudders at your crime; and I am sorry to say that it is becoming fearfully common in the part of the country from which you came. It is to be hoped that your example will be a warning to all—to all who undertake for filthy lucre to do what you did. Consider that unfortunate girl, who had lost her father, and was obliged to earn her bread by daily labour, and entitled to expect protection from her master in the exercise of her calling! It appears that she was distinguished in the neighborhood for her beauty and good looks. It was for this, then, that she was made to suffer at her early age, all the agonies which produced her death—at an age when she had reason to expect a long and happy life, she was sent by your hand to meet her Maker. You were prepared for thirty dollars to assist in making away with the child, even though it should cost the life of the mother also.—Your crime [illegible] that of him who hired you. If he might [illegible] object! you must be, and feel, white for $30 you would lend your aid to this thing—when for $30 you would lend yourself to the murder!—You may not expect that the recommendation to mercy accompanying the verdict will be acted upon, and that your sentence will be mitigated by the Executive Government. I don't know on what that recommendation was based. I know of no worse case of murder. Nothing was premeditated, or done in haste. From October to January the crime was going on. Each time you experimented upon the body of that poor girl—each time that you tortured her afresh, you were putting yourself in the way of the commission of murder. I cannot hold out hope that the sentence will be mitigated by the Executive. I see no grounds for holding out such hopes. On the contrary, it is my duty, as a Christian man, to warn you that in all probability your days upon earth are numbered, and that at no distant date your soul will be sent to the other world, whither you have already sent that of Olive Savariat. She died in disgrace, [illegible] of her [illegible] you may die [illegible]—perhaps thousands; but, nevertheless, you have no right to meet with sympathy in your fate, no right to sympathy from men, still less women, who are victims to the fiendish act which you have practised. There is reason to fear that this is not the first occasion on which you have practised this base art.—You are an old man; you have had a long career without any check, but now it has come, and your life may be the forfeit. I cannot lose the opportunity to implore you to address yourself humbly and penitently to the throne of Grace, and abandoning your hopes of mercy from man, fervently solicit that pardon which all men may ask for. You must know that that pardon is not refused to the worst of sinners—that it is involved and naked for in the name of that Saviour whose blood is able to wipe out all the sins that have ever been committed to the end of time. I entreat you then to address yourself to that throne of Grace, ere you go where there is no repentance; for however sharp the pain here may be, there is no pain hereafter; there you must [illegible] which will be everlasting.

My duty now is to pronounce the sentence of the law, which is, that for the felony and murder of which you have been convicted, you be taken hence to the common gaol whence you came and on Friday, the 6th of December next, you be brought thence to the place of public execution, and there you be hanged by the neck till you be dead—and may God have mercy upon your soul!

A profound silence prevailed whilst the sentence was being pronounced, and the prisoner, with his eyes fixed on vacancy, exhibited manifestations for some minutes after the judge's voice was silent. It was noticed only when [illegible] on the shoulder as he was [illegible] to himself. He was then removed.

THE FRANCHISE.

The people of this Province are now awakening one of the most important privileges of a free people. Upon their proper exercise of that privilege much involving the welfare of that community for some years will depend. We are afraid that with too many the duty is not clearly understood.—The elective franchise is regarded as a piece of property which may be traded or any other piece of private property. The elective franchise is not private property, but an important public trust. If a man makes a foolish or imprudent use of his private property, he suffers himself, and perhaps his near connections, and there the evil stops. If he exercises unjustly or unfaithfully the elective franchise, the whole community suffers. Every man who cannot say that he has carefully and conscientiously weighed the merits of the different candidates, and given his support to the person whom he believes to be best qualified, betrays the trust committed to him. A single vote, it may be said, can be of small importance; but the constituencies are made of single votes, and every man who goes to the polls should have the feelings of him who goes to the field of battle, believing that the issue depends on his single arm. The abuses of the elective franchise are very numerous—the very lowest and most despicable class includes those who sell their inestimable privilege for money. All such should be scouted by society, and deprived of franchise for life. All who bribe are equally, and in one view, more guilty, for they are the tempters of the needy and unprincipled. A proof of bribery should disqualify the briber from ever holding any public situation. All this will generally be admitted, but much more remains to be corrected. There should be no compulsion exercised on the electors, whether by churches, by employers, or by friends. If the elector has any doubt about his choice, let him by all means advise with those on whose judgment and integrity he relies.—But if any ecclesiastical authority says to him, "You must vote with me, because you belong to my church," let him reject the daring assumption with indignation. If his employer says to him, "You must vote with me, because I employ you," let him tell his employer that he agreed to do certain work for him, but not to sell his conscience as a freeman for a morsel of bread. Local attachments are another great source of undue use of the franchise. An elector who votes for a candidate because he happens to live in the same section of the county, or in the same neighborhood in a city as the candidate, while he is aware that the more distant competitor is more fitted for the office, is unfaithful to his trust. Personal friendship or relationship to a candidate should be no ground for giving a vote, unless the elector can say after careful examination, that his friend or relation is the best man for the interests of the country.—There are many lawful ways of showing kindness and regard for a friend, but no friend has a claim, except on public grounds to the elector's suffrages. Every inducement held out of personal benefit or offices or emolument, to support a candidate who is not so well qualified as his competitor, will be rejected with disdain by the conscientious voter. If every elector would go to the polls fearlessly and independently, to exercise his right as a great public trust, corruption would soon be banished from the Province, and economy and good government would triumph.

"WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?"

Two or three years since, a stirring article appeared in one of the political journals under the above caption. What gave additional interest to the article in question was, that it was written by one of those "free champions" who can fight with either party in politics with equal zeal and ability, "for a consideration," and that this was the first gun fired into the ranks of those whom this deserter had been aiding. We ask the same question now, not as politicians, but as moralists, "Whither is Canada drifting?" We have upon us $70,000,000 of debt, the expenses of the Government exceed the income by at least 25 per cent per annum.—The constitution of Canada, as a larger portion of the people understand it, is openly set at naught both by the Governor and his advisers. We have the most unpopular Governor who ever set his foot in Canada since the Union. The Ministers of the Crown are openly accused of grave private vices, and of the grossest public corruption. Without deciding upon the truth or falsity of the charges then made (for we do not wish to take sides in the matter,) it seems to us that if these charges, so openly and circumstantially made, may be all false, the defences against these charges may be equally false. If one party has an interest and motive in bringing the charges, the other party has quite as strong an interest and motive in clearing themselves from the charges. The plain inference we draw is, that the people of Canada should themselves take in hand to enquire into these matters. Then we have one section of the country governing the other, much to the annoyance and vexation of that other. Now, what we intend by hoisting at this evident state of things is, that Canada, as a country, is drifting along very fast. The question is "Whither?" Are we satisfied, as a people, to have men represent us in Parliament as in the Government whose intemperance had other vices are an open reproach to us? And if the constitution of Canada is such that the ministers of the day can spend millions of our money without first obtaining the sanction of Parliament, ought we not to have the seals close? But what we chiefly deplore is, that neither party in politics can be believed; and the charges or defences of the one party or the other are credited only by the respective parties. In this state of things desirable! Is it not a sore of the most miserable of results that open charges of vice, corruption, and falsehood do not disturb our public men? So low has the moral sense of the country sunk by the kind of warfare that has been carried on, that they do not care apparently what is laid to the charge of the candidate they may favor. Is it to be understood hereafter that morality and truth are to be banished from the arena of politics? Have politics no fixed principles? and have politicians no morals? May the vilest profligate who can get himself returned to Parliament by some rotten borough, pass as a good father, while he sneers at the few virtuous and Christian men who are found in the House!—"Whither are we drifting?"—Baptist Toronto.

Vote for Col. Haultain and for the rights of Upper Canada; for an end to French Domination; and for honest legislation.

The Grand Trunk Report.

The long-delayed report has at length appeared, and from it we gather the following ASTOUNDING DISCLOSURES from which it appears that ROBBERY HAS BEEN COMMITTED, and that TWO MILLIONS FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS OF CANADA SIX PER CENT DEBENTURES, have been loaned to this bankrupt concern, without the consent or knowledge of the representatives of the People.

Here are the proofs brought out by Mr. Langton and the other Commissioners.—The entry stands in the books as follows:

"Financial Agents of Canada (Loan Account, Nov. 15, 1860,) $2,432,258."

Mr. Langton immediately made the following enquiry of Mr. Galt, our Inspector General:—

"Quebec, April 9th, 1861.

"My dear Sir,

"I perceive in my examination into the books of the Grand Trunk Railway, that in November last a new loan account was opened under the title of "Financial Agents of Canada," for £500,000 sterling. As no such account with the Financial Agents appear in the books of the Province, may I request that you will inform me whether you are aware of any arrangement with them authorising it.

"I remain yours sincerely,
"JOHN LANGTON.

"Hon. A. T. Galt,
"Minister of Finance."

To which Mr. Galt replied as follows:—

"Office of the Minister of Finance,
"Quebec, 9th April, 1861.

"My dear Sir,

"In reply to your letter of the 8th inst., stating that in the books of the Grand Trunk Company, a new loan account appears as opened in November last, under the title of "Financial Agents of Canada," for £500,000 sterling, and inquiring whether I am aware of any such transaction. I beg to state that no such loan has either been made or authorised by the Government."

"I remain yours very truly,
"A. T. GALT.

"John Langton, Esquire,
"Chairman, G.T.R. Commission."

The Commissioners, finding that they could get no satisfaction from Mr. Galt, demanded from the Secretary of the Grand Trunk a copy of his instructions relative to said entry, when he furnished the following certified facts from the minutes of the London Board, dated Nov. 15th, 1860:

"Resolved—That the Financial Agents of the Province of Canada, having advanced already the larger amount, and agreed to advance the remainder, of money required for the withdrawal of the £500,000 six per cent. Provincial Bonds on the demand of the Minister of Finance; and AS THESE BONDS WERE LOANED TO THE COMPANY UNDER THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE HON. JOHN ROSS, the Financial Agents be desired to open a separate account for these payments, entitled:

"LOAN BY THE FINANCIAL AGENTS OF THE PROVINCE OF CANADA TO THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY, BY THE HON. JOHN ROSS, ACTING ON BEHALF OF THE FINANCE MINISTER OF CANADA."

The London Board of Directors is composed of:

THOS. BARING, Chairman
GEO CARR GLYNN,
Mr. HODGSON,
Mr. BLAKE, and
WM. CHAPMAN.

and the first two are the heads of the firms who act as the Financial Agents of Canada, and to them Mr. John Ross gave orders to hand over the FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS sterling, of Canada six per cent debentures to the Grand Trunk Company.

Mr. Langton after receiving the above extracts, immediately demanded a further explanation from Mr. Galt. That gentleman, instead of writing to the Hon. John Ross, and getting an explanation, if he could give any, tried to choke off all enquiry by saying that he must have time to write to England. In this way he has delayed the Report to the present time, and it would not now have seen the light had not the Governor General insisted on its publication.

THE LOWER CANADA OPPOSITION LEADER.

The formal assumption, by the Hon. Mr. Sinotte, of the Lower Canadian Opposition, has given a fresh impulse to the hopes of the Liberals of Upper Canada, and will give material aid to that movement in favor of a return to the old landmarks of the Reform party, which is now engaging the energies of the best men of the Province. Lower Canada owes it to herself no longer to be dragged at the heels of a mere minority of Upper Canada. She will no longer endure to be made the instrument of an insolent tyranny, for the especial benefit of a faction. There are encouraging evidences offered every day of the decline of that sectional excitement which has had so much to do in causing, or rather in rendering possible, the enormities of the Cartier-Macdonald regime; and if moderate councils prevail during the approaching elections, we shall see at the meeting of Parliament a recurrence to the condition of things in the House, something like that which prevailed in the days of Baldwin and Lafontaine; when legislation was conducted in a spirit of earnestness and reality; when constitutional precepts were reverentially referred to; when government was carried on for the good of the people and for the advancement of the Province, and when both sections of the country enjoyed their legitimate privileges in the legislature and at the Council table. The great majority of the electors, East and West, so far as we can judge, seem to be prepared to make these concessions which are required as the price of mutual reconciliation. One only sees now at rare intervals any of those offensive illusions with which the West once irritated and vexed Lower Canadians. And except from Mr. Cartier himself, and two or two of his special organs, we hear no more of the [illegible] formerly too common.—But reconciliation must be carried further. Lower Canada must abdicate the exercise of the dictatorship she now enjoys and Upper Canada will in turn come to struggle for the long and overwhelming supremacy. All necessities in the representation will yield readily enough to the harmonious efforts of honest men desirous of doing justice and allaying bad feelings; and it will be a lasting honor to the [illegible] to be the instrument of establishing [illegible] the people of Canada peace and prosperity depends so much upon mutual good understanding and co-operation.

VOTE for HAULTAIN!

The Examiner.

SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1861.

A FINAL WORD.

The issues are fairly before the Electors, and no doubt the majority have already decided in their own minds how they will vote. To our friends we would say WORK, work with a will! exertion is all that is necessary now to secure a triumphant victory for Col. F. W. HAULTAIN. Remember to go early to the polls on the first day.

THE CONTEST.

Mr. Conger's organ is again playing its old game of brag to keep up the spirits of the party. We are glad our contemporary likes the aspect of affairs so much, but are not however the less confident that Col. Haultain's election is sure. We are at a loss to conceive how it could be otherwise. For as truth ever will prevail, so will honesty and candour always prevail over targiversation and deceit.

The issue before the electors is plain, and is this: which of the two candidates is the most fit and proper person to represent the county in parliament? To decide the question we must consider the merits or demerits of the case.

Mr. Conger then has long been resident in the county and for a considerable time performed the duties of Sheriff with profit to himself, and we will admit with satisfaction to the public. But like many other men he was not satisfied to let well alone; he wanted something better, and, as the means to that end, he entered the political arena. Ambition was his ruin.

By that sin fell the angels, how can man then
Though the image of his Maker, hope to win by't?

He entered parliament a Reformer, but found that the only way (as he tells us himself) by which he could get anything for himself, or the county, was by becoming a thick and thin supporter of a corrupt ministry,—becoming in short a political turn-coat and selling his vote, and his pledges to his constituents, at whatever price the ministers would give. This political somersault was sufficient by itself to forfeit forever the confidence of every true Reformer. But as if that was not enough we find him endorsing and approving, by his vote, the worst acts and conduct of the ministry, even when these acts and their conduct were subversive of the first principles of the Constitution.

Take for instance the Tariff question, on which Mr. Conger is so liberal now; and it will be found, on referring to the Journals of the House, that in 1856 he voted with the Government and against an amendment proposed by Mr. Brown to postpone further consideration of an increase of the Customs Tariff.

On another occasion, in the same year when Mr. McKenzie motions to prevent a proposed further increase of the Provincial Debt, moved an amendment to that effect, we again find Mr. Conger supporting the ministry and voting against the amendment. Perhaps that may have been Mr. Conger's way of carrying out his views with regard to retrenchment! Regarding his votes for aid to the Grand Trunk from the Provincial Exchequer we believe he did once vote against aid being given; but this was subsequently to having voted away no less than £2,000,000 of the people's money to that miserably managed concern. From the 11th to the 24th June, 1856, Mr. Conger recorded no fewer than sixteen or eighteen votes in favor of the Grand Trunk receiving money.

Mr. Conger has now, it would appear, come to the conclusion that it is wrong to retain Mr. Morrison in the Ministry without representing a constituency. We maintain that the conduct of the government in this matter is in direct violation of the first principles of the constitution, and challenge the Review, notwithstanding its random assertion that there are dozens of cases in point in England, to mention a single instance.

Being wrong and unconstitutional now it must have been equally wrong and unconstitutional in 1856, yet we remember that when Mr. Vankoughnet in that year became a member of the Government without having a seat in parliament Mr. Conger voted with the other supporters of the ministry that it was then right and proper that he should remain in the ministry.

We have now done with Mr. Conger's political antics; they must be exceedingly gratifying to all lovers of inconsistency.—Since he was rejected by the county for his political dishonesty he has done nothing either in his capacity of resident or merchant to regain the confidence of the community. To say that he gave up his Sheriffship, purely for the love of serving the country, and without any expectation of getting something better, is simply saying what the most innocent of his supporters will not believe. Regarding the opening up of the back country and effecting local improvements we have already given him all the credit he deserves. The first as we have already stated was begun about fifteen years ago and is going on still, and as the best paying operations the present government has been concerned in. The local improvements have been at the Trent's expense, and expensively carried on, as any present heavy debt but too plainly bears witness.

Col. Haultain comes before us as an independent man, unconnected with no party. The greatest difference between the two men is that Col. Haultain can be depended on to perform, to the best of his ability, what he promises, and that Mr Conger cannot be depended on at all. His own supporters even have no confidence in him; whilst the greatest faults they can find to Col. Haultain are that he is comparatively a stranger, and altogether too honest. The very fact that he has been a resident about nine months in Peterboro', and about nine years in the Province, and that they can find nothing else against him (for without doubt they have tried) is the best recommendation that he could possibly have; and we have no fear but that the electors of this county on Tuesday and Wednesday next, will by a sweeping majority, show that they consider it to be so.

THE HILL SWINDLE.

The facts of this most disgraceful case are public for over a week, and no attempt at contradiction has been made. Electors! think of the disgraceful conduct of Mr. Conger, when poor Hill (mistaking the man, as many are now doing,) entrusted his business in his hands! What confidence can you have in Conger to transact your public business, when he acts so dishonestly in a private transaction?

CONGER'S ORGAN ON RELIGION AND POLITICS.

The Review, we perceive, wishes to make political capital for his friend, Mr. Conger, by appealing to the religious sympathy of a large and influential number of our fellow Christians, viz., the Wesleyan Methodists, and tells them that should Col. Haultain be returned to Parliament, they "will find themselves egregiously sold."—We have only to say that if poor Conger is reduced to such straits as this, we almost pity his hopeless chance of success. As Conger's organ has thought proper to bring people's religious views to bear in this contest, we need not hesitate to remind our readers that Mr. Conger's canvassers have no hesitation in boasting that they can command the whole Roman Catholic vote, and that they consider Douro and Ennismore as "pocket Townships." We confess that Col. Haultain does not expect any but the more intelligent Roman Catholics to vote for him—men who can direct themselves of prejudices—especially as the Colonel does not hesitate to come out on thorough Protestant principles, and despises the mean, contemptible tricks of his opponent, who is "all things to all men," and would sell either party in turn, if it suited his purpose.

THE ELECTIONS.

Another glorious triumph has been achieved, Mr. Solicitor General Morin has been defeated in Terrebone by a majority of over 107! This is the second member of the Government who has been rejected at the polls. Cheering news reaches us from East Northumberland; Mr. Bigger has been elected over Meyers the Ministerial candidate by a majority of 235. Full returns from Victoria show Mr. Dunsford's majority to be 250!

Lambton has proved herself true as ever, and has returned Mr. Mackenzie.

In North Lanark Mr. Robert Bell has been returned by acclamation.

In Leonox and Addington, Roblin, Ministerialist, has been rejected. Hooper's majority, 382.

Thus far twelve Oppositionists have been returned in Upper Canada, and only 10 Ministerialists.

☞ By the latest reports from Toronto we learn that Grand Trunk money has prevailed, and Mr. George Brown has been defeated. Robinson is also said to be ahead of Wilson.

HOUNDING DOWN.

It is lamentable that men who in ordinary times pass themselves off as respectable, will condescend to low, unscrupulous tricks in an election contest. Col. Haultain in his quiet, but successful canvass of the County, has been followed from place to place at times by a set of unscrupulous fellows, who under the pretence of "speaking in behalf of Mr. Conger," have taken occasion to pervert facts and state untruths with the intention of leading the electors from the real questions before the country, and in more than one instance has Col. Haultain been the object of the most unmerited abuse. At a meeting in Asphodel, on Thursday, Col. Haultain, when almost alone and unaided, was pounced upon by some half-dozen men, who in a manner not very becoming the positions of some of them, dealt out the most unwarrantable abuse, where they well know they would not be called to account for it. These attacks have all been met in a quiet and dignified spirit by Col. Haultain, he choosing rather to suffer than condescend to follow the example of his unscrupulous persecutors.

CAUTION TO TAVERN-KEEPERS.

It may not be generally known that the keepers of houses of public entertainment are required to have their places closed during election days. The law is very stringent, as it compels these days to be observed precisely as if they were Sundays. For the information of those interested, we publish the clause of the act bearing upon this subject:—

"Every hotel, tavern and shop in which spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks are ordinarily sold, shall be closed during the two days appointed for polling in the Wards or Municipalities in which the polls are held in the same manner as it should be on Sunday during Divine Service, and no spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks shall be sold or given during the said period—under a penalty of one hundred dollars against the keeper thereof if he neglects to close it, and under a like penalty if he sells or gives any spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks as aforesaid."

VOTE FOR

Haultain and Honesty.

WHAT IS MISREPRESENTATION?

The Review must have very extraordinary notions as to what misrepresentation is. From the commencement of the contest up to, and including, its last issue, it has persisted in a system of falsification and perversion more despicably mean than we have ever before seen. And there is something cunning too in connection with it, for no sooner do Mr. Conger's party invent and circulate a fresh falsehood or scandal than the Review turns round and charges it against Colonel Haultain's supporters.—The editor of the Review, it seems to us, is one of those shallow-minded individuals who judge others by themselves; or one of those revengeful spirits who, begrimed with dirt themselves, throw filth all around them on others, to make them, if possible, as foul as themselves.

The Review is not satisfied with outraging decency by twisting and distorting Col. Haultain's statements and deductions till their author would not know them; but it has also committed the most atrocious outrage on newspaper honesty, by giving a false and perverted report of Col. Haultain's speech at the Hastings. Had the editor of that print wilfully misprinted Col. Haultain's address, so as to make him profess sentiments which he never expressed, would that not have been universally denounced; and yet there is no difference between the two cases.

It is also downright and wilful dishonesty in the Review to attempt to connect Col Haultain with Mr. Brown and his party after that gentleman's distinct and repeated statements that he is connected with no party, but will support good measures from whatever quarter they come. In this, we suppose, the Review takes its cue from Mr. Conger, who is so politically dishonest himself that he cannot believe even in the idea of honesty in politics.

The Review also states what it knows to be untrue when it says that the only difference between Col. Haultain and Mr. Conger is that the first would vote against everything brought up by the present ministry whether good or bad, and that the latter will not pledge himself to go against them to this extent. We know from Mr. Conger's antecedents that he will not go against them at all. Col. Haultain says that the present ministry have acted unconstitutionally and that he would vote nonconfidence in them; but that if at such vote the present ministry were sustained, although he might not have any more faith in them, he would as a matter of course vote in favour of any good measure originating with them. And this is simply the course that every honest independent man should follow although the Review with its strong factious party notions seems to think it impossible.

Again, with regard to University reform. The Review states what it knows to be false when it says that Col. Haultain, at the North Ward meeting, declared against Reform. He made no such statement there; and what he has since said is, that although he has not yet had time fully to investigate the question, and cannot therefore give any distinct pledge on the subject, that in so far as regards any surplus funds he would be in favor of dividing them fairly and justly among the other educational institutions of the country. In so far as we understand Mr. Conger, (though it is sometimes very difficult to understand what that gentleman means) his views on this question are very similar. If we are wrong we should be glad to be corrected. We certainly have heard from several well informed sources that Mr. Conger's public professions on this subject are different from his private pledges, and that, in order to get the support of the Wesleyans, he has given private pledges to some of them to vote for the whole surplus being given to the Victoria College at Cobourg. We can only say that if such pledges have been made, and were Mr. Conger elected they would assuredly be broken just as his former pledge with regard to Separate Schools was broken.

With regard to alleged misrepresentation of Mr. Conger's hustings speech by the Examiner, on the subject of Grants to the Grand Trunk, we have simply to say, that we stated in effect what we ourselves heard and on this same matter we are corroborated by others who also heard what Mr. Conger then said. We gave the report in condensed form and therefore do not pretend to have given the precise words, but we believe and know that we say is correct. We made our report on our own responsibility, knowing it to be true, and would not alter it though requested by Col. Haultain himself. To hold him responsible for what we say is simply absurd. The Review might as well hold Mr. Conger or the Governor General, for that part, responsible for what we publish. We support Col. Haultain to the best of our ability as he is the best man to represent us in Parliament; and we would still have hope the Review is as honest in supporting Mr. Conger though its conduct and arguments lead to a contrary conclusion.

With regard to introducing personalities and dragging personal and private matters into the present contest we never have done so. The £1,500 affair was as public a matter as anything could be, and the Hill affair had also been through the Courts and was known to most people in town. Had we been desirous of introducing personal matters we had abundance of material to work on, and are ashamed to think that the Review from its present conduct, if placed in our position, would not have thrown away the advantage. It is easy to say that the grapes are sour when they cannot be reached.

But it would be absurd to say that a man's private character is not to be taken into account in an election question. Would any man seem pretend to say that a disreputable man in private life is equally entitled to our confidence as an honest man?—Decidedly not; and therefore, in every election, a man's private character and antecedents must be, and are, to a greater or less extent, taken into account.

GREAT FIRE.

We are sorry to learn that a most disasterous fire occured in Lindsay yesterday by which it is said the business part of the Town was reduced to ashes. We have heard no particulars.

Vote for Haultain!

MEAN.

The Congerites are really driven to such desperation that they bring up a garbled extract from the Journals of the House, 1858, in which Mr. Short voted for a certain motion, and ruthlessly try to saddle to saddle Col. Haultain with responsibility for the act. Yours is a hard case, gentlemen of the other side, but such meanness and trickery won't help you any.

The evidences of bribery, direct and indirect, in the part of Mr. Conger's friends, are astonishing! The friends of honesty and good government must make up their minds, that they have all the criminal influences of bribery and corruption to contend against.

THE HILL CASE.

Mr. Editor,—Mr. Conger attempted to explain away the Hill Scandal at his meeting in Keene; but he made a poor thing of it. He said that while the note was in Hill's hand's he paid several instalments; and, of course, when the note was used, he would not pay the whole amount, and so let it be protested. Can any man who knows Conger believe that he would pay money on a bank note without getting credit for it? Nonsense! And he referred to W. Landy, Esq., of Peterboro', to back his statement. Now, it may be as well that the public should know that Mr. Landy denies any knowledge of money being paid on the note, and he believes it was only a shuffle to get out of the tight place he was in before the electors that Conger referred to him at all.

X. Y. Z.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Mr. W. H. Moore writes to the Review complaining of the hard treatment he received at the hands of the Returning Officer, and takes occasion to drag my name into the arena. It was generally understood that the Post-Master General was to appear before the electors as a candidate, but that fading, a few small guns such as Tom White, were to be nominated in order to address the meeting in Conger's behalf.—To checkmate this move it was the intention of the opposite party to nominate Thomas Short, Esq., and it was my duty to second that nomination, and I told the Returning Officer so when I went on the hustings.—But for reasons they know best, no one on that side was nominated but Mr. Conger, so of course we would not nominate any one else either. Mr. Moore reminds me of the dog in the manger, he is always in trouble. He is incapable of originating an idea himself, or of carrying out anything to satisfaction, but if any one else undertakes to do what he can't, he bites and snarls; but he can't help it, it's his nature. Has Mr. Moore learnt anything more about the Peterboro farce? I abhor a liar and detest a scandal-monger, and when the editor of the Review says that I "was there as fugleman for the lumbermen," he states what is false altogether. I knew no lumbermen who were present there but Mr. Fowlds, Mr. Conger and myself. (Mr. Fowlds and I in old times took square timber to Quebec; some of the masts now grace the proudest of our ocean ships, and Mr. Conger took out bass-wood for chairs.) The statement of Mr. White that I kept my seat on the hustings by a "deliberate falsehood" in a lie, I can find no more expressive term to say what I mean. The man who can accuse the Sheriff of partiality in declaring the show of hands in favor of Col. Haultain, when all who were present were satisfied that the vote was at least two to one against Conger, is not a fit person to live in a moral community.

Your obed't servant,
JAS. MILLER.

THE COMET.

The New York Herald and some of the correspondents speak of the comet now visible as the great comet of Charles V. which appeared in 1264 and again in 1456, and was announced to return in 1858, but failed to keep the appointment. The Herald is not much of an authority on scientific matters, and until actual observations have been made of the course of the present comet, we would not hastily identify it with that of Charles V. "W. B." in a letter to the newspapers of London, C. W. gives what appears to be a sufficiently probable theory on the subject:—

"Many persons are asking the question, what comet is this which has come so suddenly into view in the northern heavens, and what have astronomers been about that they did not give us timely notice of the stranger's approach, so that we might at least have been on the look out for so splendid a visitor. I can only account for the apathy of the star-gazers by supposing they have been too much taken up with the war on the other side of the lines, or with the elections on this, or they would have kept us better posted up in our astronomy. By referring back to your papers for April last, you will find it recorded that Mr Thatcher, a person who exhibits a large telescope on the Park, Broadway, New York, upon the morning of the 4th April, discovered this comet, which was then approaching the sun. In the latter part of April it was seen passing through the quadrangle of the Great Bear, or what is called the Dipper, and was visible to the naked eye to those who knew its position; it soon, however, got lost in the rays of the sun, and was not seen again for some time. It arrived at its perihelion, or the nearest point of its orbit to the sun, on the 4th June, and on Sunday evening last, the 30th June, it was again plainly to be seen after sunset above the horizon. It has a nucleus of the first magnitude, and with a tail extending to the zenith, fully ninety degrees in length. It is leaving the sun very rapidly, and appears to be taking the same route on its return by which it came, and will be again seen passing through the Dipper to-morrow morning on its way back to the realms of space. I should think, by its rapid movement, that we will not be able to see it long with the naked eye, and will only be able to follow it for a short time with the telescope. Many persons thought that this was the long expected comet, last seen in the year 1556, but it is not."

Map of Upper Canada,

TOGETHER WITH A
DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY
OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF
HPN & S'H MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONLIN, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority; also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the Lots and Concessions of each County and Township, the Great Lakes, Rivers, and principal Mill Streams. Tables showing the Population of each City, Town, County and Township will also be given, with other important and valuable information, chiefly compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be Illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province, commencing in the metropolis of the art. There will also be given on the above Map an enlarged Plan, in the most minute detail, of the above Townships, showing dimensions, lots, and sub-divisions, with the names of the proprietors neatly engraved thereon; also, the situation of Churches, Schools, Mills, Taverns, &c., &c., together with the Directory, containing a complete Rural, Professional, and Mercantile Business Directory.

The publishers being practical engravers, printers, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 42 by 32 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvas, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4 50) payable on delivery.

Other Townships in the County will be completed in due time.

☞ Gentlemen to exhibit a neat specimen of the above work, with our terms explained thereon.

CAUTION.—This enterprise is in no way connected with that projected by Messrs. Tremaine, of Jefferson County, State of New York.

Poetry.

BABY MAY.

Cheeks as soft as July peaches,
Lips whose dewy scarlet teaches
Poppies paleness—round large eyes
Ever great with new surprise,
Minutes filled with shadeless gladness,
Minutes just as brimmed with sadness,
Happy smiles and wailing cries,
Crows and laughs and tearful eyes.
Lights and shadows swifter born
Than on wind-swept autumn corn,
Ever some new tiny motion—
Making every limb all motion—
Catchings-up of legs and arms,
Throwings-back and small alarms,
Clutching fingers—straightening jerks,
Twining feet whose each toe works,
Kicking up and straining risings,
Mother's ever new surprisings,
Hands all wants and looks all wonder.
At all things the heavens under,
Tiny scorns of smiled reprovings
That have more of love than lovings,
Mischiefs done with such a winning
Archness that we prize our sinning,
Breakings dire of plates and glasses,
Graspings small at all that passes,
Pullings-off of all that's able
To be caught from tray or table;
Silences—small meditations,
Deep as thoughts of cares for nations;
Breaking into wisest speeches,
In a tongue that nothing teaches,
All the thoughts of whose possessing
Must be wooed to light by guessing;
Slumber—such sweet angel-seemings
That we'd ever have such dreamings,
Till from sleep we see thee breaking,
And we'd always have thee waking;
Wealth for which we know no measure,
Pleasure high above all pleasure,
Gladness brimming over gladness,
Joy in care—delight in sadness,
Loveliness beyond completeness,
Sweetness distancing all sweetness,
Beauty all that beauty may be,
That's May Bennett—that's my baby!

O'CONNEL AND THE HUCKSTER SQUABBLING BY EUCLID.

One of the drollest scenes of vituperation that O'Connell ever figured in, took place in the early part of his life. Not long after he was called to the bar, his character and peculiar talents received rapid recognition from all who were casually acquainted with him. His talents for vituperative language was perceived, and by some he was even in these days considered matchless as a scold. There was, however, at that time in Dublin, a certain woman, Biddy Moriarty, who had a huckster's stall at one end of the quay, opposite the Four Courts. She was a virago of the first order, very able with her fists and still more formidable with her tongue. From one end of Dublin to the other she was notorious for her power of abuse, and even in the Provinces Moriarty's language had passed into currency. The dictionary of Dublin slang had been considerably enlarged by her, and her valuable impudence had almost become proverbial. Some of O'Connell's friends however, thought he could beat her with the use of her own weapons. Of this, however, he had some doubt himself, when he had listened once or twice to some minor specimens of her billingsgate. It was once mooted whether the young Kerry barrister could encounter her, and some of the company in O'Connell's presence rather too freely ridiculed the idea of his being able to meet the famous Moriarty. O'Connell never liked the idea of being put down, and professed himself ready to encounter her, and even backed himself for the scratch.—Bets were offered and taken; it was decided that it should come off at once. The party adjourned to the huckster's stall, and there was the owner herself superintending the sale of her small wares—a few loungers and ragged idlers were hanging about her stall—for Biddy was a "character" and, in her way one of the sights of Dublin.

O'Connell was confident of success. He had laid an ingenious plan for overcoming her, and, with all the anxiety of an ardent experimentist, wanted to put it in practice. He resolved to open the attack. At this time O'Connell's own party and the loungers about the place formed an audience quite sufficient to rouse Mrs. Moriarty, on public provocation, to a due exhibition of her powers, O'Connell commenced the attack—

"What's the price of this walking stick, Mrs. what's your name."

"Moriarty, sir, is my name, and a good one it is, and what have you to say again it?—and one-and-sixpence is the price of the stick. It's as cheap as dirt—so it is."

"One-and-sixpence for a walking stick! Whew! why you are no better than an impostor, to ask one-and-sixpence for what cost you fourpence."

"Four-pence, your grandmother," replied Mrs Biddy, do you mane to say in absenting the people I sell. Impostor indeed!

"Aye, impostor: and its that I call you, to your teeth."

"Come out your stick, you contimkerous jack-anapes."

"Keep a civil tongue in your head you old dingonel," replied O'Connell, calmly.

"Stop you jaw you pug nosed badger, or by this and that," cried Biddy, "I'll make you go quicker than you came."

"Don't be in a passion, my old radius, anger will only wrinkle your beauty."

"By the bobey if you say another word of impudence, "I'll tan your dirty hide. you beetly commune scrub, and sorry I'll be to soil my fist with your carcase."

"Oho, boys, what a passion old Biddy is in, I protest, as I'm a gentleman——"

"Jintleman! Jintleman! the likes of you a Jintleman! Well, by gor, that bangs Bangher. Why, you potatoe-faced-pippin monger, when did a Mahogenee monkey like you pick up enough of commune decency to hide your Kerry brogue?"

"Hoy now!" said O'Connell with imperturable good humor, "don't shake yourself with foul language, you old whiskey drinking parrallelogram."

"What's that you called me you mercheris' villian!" roared Moriarty, now stung into a fury.

"I call you" answered O'Connell "a parallelogram, and a Dublin Judge and Jury would support me in saying that it's no libel to call you so."

"Oh, tar-an-ages! Oh holy Biddy, that a decent, honest woman like me should be called a parrybollygram to her face. I'm sure of your parrybollygrams you recently fell to the dirt, and many a strong man is quaked before it. And the storm itself is scarcely less trying to one's nerves than just before it strikes, while men wait in dreadful suspense.

Then those men waited till the minutes lengthened into hours, and the only change perceptible was in the deepening color of that lowering cloud of crimson light. At length eight bells told that four o'clock had arrived, and daylight was looked for as those men with Paul looked for it when they "wished for day."

But the struggling light of the day seemed only to reveal the thickness of the wandering vision. Just at daylight their ears were stunned with successive quick reports louder than whole broadsides from a hundred-gun ship, the whole heavens were lighted up with a fiery red light—the ocean was stirred from her profound depths—great waves, without any visible cause, ran in the most awful commotion, now striking together and throwing the white foam and spray high in the air, then parting to meet again in fearful embrace as before; a school of sperm whales ran athwart the ship's bows, making every exertion to escape the strangely troubled waters; within a few cable lengths of the ship an immense column of water was thrown mast-head high, and fell back again with a roar like Niagara; a deep mournful sound like the echo of thunder among mountain caverns, was constantly heard, and none could tell from whence it came; the noble ship was tossed and shattered like a plaything.

"Great God, have mercy upon us!" cried officers and men. 'What is this?' What is coming next? Is it the day of judgment? The royal Psalmist describes them accurately: "They reel to and fro and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end." Soon the mystery was solved, when right before their eyes, about one league from them, there arose the rough sides of a mountain out of the yielding water, and reared its high head in the air; then from its summit flames burst forth, and melted lava ran like a river down the declivity, and fell like a cascade of flame into the seething ocean. It was a birth-throe of nature, and an island was born which was miles in circumference.

LOST ARTS.

And in regard to colors, we are far behind the ancients. None of the colors in the Egyptian painting of thousands of years ago are in the least faded, except the green. The Tyrian purple of the entombed city of Pompeii is as fresh to-day as it was three thousand years ago. Some of the stucco, painted centuries before the Christian era, broken up and mixed, revealed its original lustre. And yet we pity the ignorance of the dark-skinned children of the ancient Egypt. The colors upon the walls of Nero' Festal Vault are as fresh as if painted yesterday. So is the cheek of the Egyptian prince who was contemporaneous with Solomon, and Cleopatra, at whose feet Cæsar laid the riches of his empire.

And in regard to metals. The edges of the stones of the obelisks of Egypt, and of the ancient walls of Rome, are as sharp as if but hewn yesterday. And the stones still remain so closely fitted, that their seams, laid with mortar, cannot be penetrated with the edge of a pen-knife. And their surface is exceedingly hard—so hard that when the French artists engraved two lines upon an obelisk brought from Egypt, they destroyed, in the tedious task, many sets of the best tools which could be manufactured. And yet these ancient monuments are traced all over with inscriptions placed upon them in olden time. This with other facts of a striking character, prove that they were far more skilled in metals than we are.—Quite recently it is recorded that, when an American vessel was on the shores of Africa, a son of that benighted region made, from an iron hoop, a knife superior to any on board of the vessel, and another made a sword of Damascus excellence from a piece of iron.

Fiction is very old. Scott had his count-parts two thousand years ago. A story is told of a warrior who had no time to wait for the proper forging of his weapon, but seizing it red-hot, rode forward, but found to his surprise that the cold air had tempered his iron into an excellent steel weapon. The tempering of steel, therefore, which was new to us a century since, was old two thousand years ago.

Ventilation is deemed a very modern art. But this is not the fact, for apertures, unquestionably made for the purpose of ventilation, are found in the Pyramid Tombs of Egypt. Yes, thousands of years ago, the barbarous Pagans went so far as to ventilate their tombs, while we yet scarcely know how to ventilate our houses.—Wendell Philips.

RECIPE FOR MAKING YEAST.

The following recipe, for making yeast, was communicated to the London Times, for the benefit of the troops before Sebastopol, during the dreadful sufferings of the first winter of the Crimean war. It possesses one advantage over all similar receipies, that we have met with, in not requiring any old yeast, in the making.—In country places and remote settlements, that would be a great merit, and it would render unnecessary long journeys to brewers and other establishments, where the "small quantity of yeast" to start with must necessarily be obtained. It has been used in the family of a gentleman in the neighbourhood for the last six years, without failing in a single instance, and affording invariably the most perfect satisfaction. We publish it for the benefit of our numerous patrons,—fully believing that every one who may give it a fair trial, will admit, that it would be cheaply purchased, at the price of a year's subscription to the EXAMINER:—

"DISTILLED YEAST.—On Monday morning, take two (2) ounces of fresh hops, and four (4) quarts of cold water. Put them together into a boiler, over a bright fire, and let them just boil [4] an hour. Strain out the hops, and throw them away. Let the liquor cool down to the temperature of new milk or blood warmth. Stir into the liquor a handful of salt, and half [½] a pound of brown sugar. Take a pound of the best flour in a bowl, and with some of the liquor beat it up into a thin batter or paste. Then pour this batter with the rest of the liquor into a large earthen vessel, and mix them well together. Stand it (covered) in a moderately warm place—the chimney corner—stirring it frequently, my every hour or two, until Wednesday morning. Then add three (3) pounds of boiled potatoes, mashed fine. Stand in the same place, and stir it as before until Thursday, or as long as it continues to work. Then pass it through a common meal or flour sieve, in which assistance of a spoon may be necessary, and bottle it, leaving the cork rather loose for a day or two. Before using it, shake it up in the bottle. A large tablespoonful, for each loaf, of the intended baking will generally be found sufficient. It may be kept two months or longer without losing any of its efficiency, and will generally be found equal to brewer's yeast."

TRIAL FOR MURDER IN MONTREAL.

A MEDICAL MAN SENTENCED TO DEATH.

The trial of Dr. Jesse Patterson, for the murder of Olive Savarist, of Clarenceville, Eastern Townships, by causing an abortion, after occupying three days in the Court of Queen's Bench, Montreal, closed on Thursday last. The Jury, after being out for an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. The report in the Herald then proceeds:—

After a pause, the Clerk of the Crown, addressing the still motionless prisoner, inquired if he had anything to urge why sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

Patterson slowly turned his head and addressing the speaker, said, with slow and faltering accents, "I don't think there is anything to be said. I don't think it would prove of any service. Perhaps if I had time and opportunity I might offer some explanations, but they would be of no use. They would not alter the sentence. I throw myself upon the mercy of the Court."

The crier then made proclamation, enjoining silence while sentence of death was being passed, under pain of imprisonment.

Judge Alywin then slowly and impressively addressing the prisoner, said, "In charging the jury who have tried you and found guilty of murder, it was necessary to state, under the peculiar circumstances of your case, that the law was so clear as to leave no doubt as to the precise extent of your offence, and that it clearly came within the definition of murder. The sole question which the jury had to decide was whether the death of the unfortunate girl, Olive Savarist, was the result of your act, direct or indirect. On that question they have pronounced their verdict, and no man who has been present at this trial can say but that it is the verdict which he, if he had been on his oath, would have been impelled to give. The facts are so strong as to leave no room for consideration. It is a strange thing that you should have undertaken such a wicked deed,—for at best it was a wicked deed,—by medicines and other means, of taking the child from that unfortunate girl—of depriving that child of its existence, at the same time that you were imperilling the life of the girl herself. In your case something strange has occurred. You have brought up no witness as to your character, but on the other hand, one of the witnesses was obliged, in the course of the cross-examination, to state that your character in the neighbourhood was indisputably bad; and that you were in the habit of selling your services for this abominable purpose. A man of your age, and one assuming, too, to be a healer of suffering humanity to lend yourself for filthy, hireling lucre to such a service! A practice which, if generally followed in any neighbourhood, would convert that locality into a hell upon earth. Your crime, if imitated, would have the most disastrous results which it is possible to suppose. Bad as war is, your crime would produce worse results. Humanity shudders at your crime; and I am sorry to say that it is becoming fearfully common in the part of the country from which you came. It is to be hoped that your example will be a warning to all—to all who undertake for filthy lucre to do what you did. Consider that unfortunate girl, who had lost her father, and was obliged to earn her bread by daily labour, and entitled to expect protection from her master in the exercise of her calling! It appears that she was distinguished in the neighborhood for her beauty and good looks. It was for this, then, that she was made to suffer at her early age, all the agonies which produced her death—at an age when she had reason to expect a long and happy life, she was sent by your hand to meet her Maker. You were prepared for thirty dollars to assist in making away with the child, even though it should cost the life of the mother also.—Your offence is worse than that of him who hired you. How mean! how abject! you must be, and feel, when for $30 you would lend your aid to this thing—when for $30 you would lend yourself to the murder!—You may not expect that the recommendation to mercy accompanying the verdict will be acted upon, and that your sentence will be mitigated by the Executive Government. I don't know on what that recommendation was based. I know of no worse case of murder. Nothing was premeditated, or done in haste. From October to January the crime was going on. Each time you experimented upon the body of that poor girl—each time that you tortured her afresh, you were putting yourself in the way of the commission of murder. I cannot hold out hopes that the sentence will be mitigated by the Executive. I see no grounds for holding out such hopes. On the contrary, it is my duty, as a Christian man, to warn you that in all probability your days upon earth are numbered, and that at no distant date your soul will be cast to the other world, whether you have already cast that of Olive Savarist. She died in disgrace, surrounded only by the members of her family and a few of her friends; you may die in the presence of hundreds—perhaps thousands; but, nevertheless, you have no right to meet with sympathy in your fate, no right to sympathy from men, still less women, who are victims to the fiendish act which you have practised. There is reason to fear that this is not the first occasion on which you have practised this base art.—You are an old man; you have had a long career without any check, but now it has come, and your life may be the forfeit. I cannot lose the opportunity to implore you to address yourself humbly and penitently to the throne of Grace, and abandoning your hopes of mercy from man, earnestly solicit that pardon which all men may ask for. You must know that that pardon is not refused to the worst of sinners—that it is invoked and asked for in the name of that Saviour whose blood is able to wipe out all the sins that have ever been committed to the end of time. I entreat you then to address yourself to that throne of Grace, ere you go where there is no repentance; for however sharp the pain here may be, there is a pain far sharper than any man can inflict—the pains of hell which will be everlasting.

My duty now is to pronounce the sentence of the law, which is, that for the felony and murder of which you have been convicted, you be taken hence to the common gaol whence you came, and on Friday, the 6th of December next, you be brought thence to the place of public execution, and that there you be hanged by the neck till you be dead—and may God have mercy upon your soul!

A profound silence prevailed whilst the sentence was being pronounced, and the prisoner, with his eyes fixed on vacancy, remained motionless for some minutes after the judge's voice was silent. It was necessary to touch him on the shoulder ere he was recalled to himself. He was then removed.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

Under the above heading, the following story is told in the Times: "There is at this time living in the neighbourhood of Middlesex Hospital a woman, seventy-five years of age, named Barnes. Sheridan knew her as a child, and persuaded her father, a baker in Bond-street, to apprentice her, at the age of fourteen, to Mrs. Jordan, who trained her to play Little Pickle in the 'Spoilt Child,' and other minor characters. At sixteen she married John Simonds, a seaman of the Colloden, and accompanied him to the West Indies, under Sir Edward Pellew (Lord Exmouth.) She was with her husband in the Mars, at Trafalgar, and assisted in the last offices to Captain Duff, who was killed early in the action. Her husband himself was killed later in the day, leaving her with four sons. In 1808, she married Henry Bavan, a soldier in the 42d, and went with the regiment to the Peninsula, where she again became a mother.—This child was killed in her arms during the retreat of Corunna, and her husband fell in the celebrated charge of the 50th and 42d, who drove the French from the field. She attended on Sir John Moore during his last moments, and was present at his funeral. Here Captain Murray, the present Lord Dunmore's grand-uncle, was so struck with her youth and distress, that he told her if ever she was in difficulties to apply to him, and he kept his promise to assist her until his decease in 1859, since which time she has been friendless. After leaving the Peninsula she became lady's maid to Mrs. Spencer Smith, wife of the English Ambassador at Constantinople, and on their way there the women were taken prisoners in Italy. The mistress escaped with a very mild form of bondage, but Murat sent the maid to the bulks at Toulon for six months. Of her four sons by the first marriage, two were killed in the Queen Charlotte at Algiers; the third fell in the 23d Regiment, in one of Lord Gough's actions in India; and the fourth, in the 11th Hussars, in the cavalry charge at Balaclava. By her third husband, who is also dead, she has had three sons and a daughter. Of these, the eldest, was lost overboard from Lord Proby's frigate off Malta; the second and third in a collier, on their way to Shields; and the daughter died in the service of an English lady in the south of France. Mrs. Barnes is now, therefore, at the age of seventy-five, alone. She is also not destitute and helpless, for she fell on her way home from Major Murray's during the winter before his death, and broke her arm. Application has been made to Her Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief to ascertain if she is eligible for a pension, and it appears that she is not; so that here is a woman who may be said to have given the lives of her two husbands and six children to the service of her country, and whom it has pleased Providence to bereave of all other kin, but for whom it would seem that her country has nothing in return."

.....A gentleman travelling in a one-horse trap chanced to stop at a small rural side inn, which rejoiced in the presence of a very intelligent Irish hostler. Wanting the mare to this worthy as he alighted, the traveller requested the man "to take his horse to the stable and bate him."

"Sure an' I will, your honor," answered the Milesian, briskly, and away he went.

In about half an hour the gentleman, having refreshed himself sufficiently, naturally concluded that his four-footed servant was in equally good case, and accordingly ordered his trap to the door. The horse was resting and trembling.

"What's the matter with my horse?" asked the traveller. "What have you been doing to him?"

"Only what your honor ordered me."

"He don't look as if he had had anything to eat."

"Is it ait your honor said?"

"To be sure."

"Sorra the word like it did yer honor say to me. More betoken, your honor could see to bate the baste, and not to ait him!"

"Why, you stupid rascal, what have you been doing?"

"Och, I just tied him up to the stable with a halter, then out with me stick and bate him till me arm was mad out."

DR. DODDRIDGE'S DREAM.

Dr. Doddridge had been spending the evening with his friend, Dr. Watts. Their conversation had been concerning the future existence of the soul. Earnestly they pursued the theme, and both came to the conclusion that they had not to sing through all eternity; that each soul must necessarily be an individual, and have its appropriate employment for thought and affection. As Doddridge walked home, his mind brooded over these ideas, and took little cognizance of outward matters. In this state, he laid his head upon the pillow, and fell asleep.—He dreamed that he was dying. He saw his weeping friends around his bed, and wanted to speak to them but could not.—Presently there came a nightmare sensation. His soul was about to leave the body; but how would it get out? More and more anxiously rose the query, how could it get out? This uneasy state passed away, and he found that the soul had left his body. He himself stood beside the bed, looking at his own corpse, as if it was an old garment laid aside as useless. His friends wept around the mortal covering, but could not see him. While he was reflecting upon this, he passed out of the room he knew not how, but presently found himself floating over London as if pillowed on a cloud, borne by gentle breezes. Far below him, the busy multitude were hurrying hither and thither, like rats and mice scampering for crumbs. "Ah," the emancipated spirit, "how worse than foolish appears this foolish scramble! For what do they toil, and what do they obtain?"

London passed away beneath him, and blooming gardens. "How is it that I am borne through the air?" thought he. He looked and saw a large purple wing, and then he knew that he was carried by an angel. "Whither are we going?" said he. "To Heaven!" was the reply. He asked no more questions, but remained in delicious quietude, as if they floated on a strain of music. At length they paused before a white marble temple of exquisite beauty.—The angel lowered his flight, and gently placed him on the steps. "I thought you were taking me to Heaven," said the spirit. "This is Heaven," replied the angel. Thus! Assuredly it is of rare beauty, but I could imagine just such built on earth. "Nevertheless, it is Heaven," replied the angel.

They entered a room just within the temple. A table stood in the centre, on which was a golden vase, filled with sparkling wine. "Drink of this," said the angel; "for all who would know spiritual things, must first drink of spiritual wine." Scarcely had the ruby liquid wet his lips, when the Saviour of men stood before him, smiling most benignly. The spirit instantly dropped on his knees, and bowed his head before him. The holy hands of the Purist were folded over him in blessings; and his voice said, "You will see me seldom now: in the meantime observe well the wonders of this temple."

The sound ceased. The spirit remained awhile in silence. When he raised his head the Saviour no longer appeared. He turned to ask the angel what this could mean, but the angel had departed also; the soul stood alone in its own unveiled presence! Why did the Holy One tell me to observe well the wonders of this temple, thought he. He looked slowly round. A sudden start of joy and wonder! There, painted on the walls, in most marvellous beauty, stood the whole of his spiritual life. Every doubt, and every clear perception; every conflict and every victory was there before him! and though forgotten for years, he knew them at a glance.—Even then had a sun beam pierced the darkest cloud, and thrown a rainbow bridge from the finite to the infinite. Then had he slept peacefully in green valleys, by the side of roaring brooks; and such had been his visions from the mountain tops. He knew them all. They had been always painted within the chambers of his soul; but now for the first time, was the veil removed.

To those who think on spiritual things, this remarkable dream is too deeply and beautifully significant ever to be forgotten. In the words of Whittier:

We shape ourselves the joy and fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.

Still shall the soul around it call
The shadows which it gathered here,
And painted on the eternal wall
The past's all re-appear.

TROOPS FOR CANADA.

The London Times disapproves of the sending of reinforcements to Canada. The following are its reasons :—

We are about to send a small army to Canada. This is just one of those steps upon which it is most difficult to pronounce an opinion, because we cannot suppose we have all the facts before us. In the present disturbed state of America reasons may exist for such a step which we cannot even guess, and we therefore approach the subject with hesitation and uncertainty. We do not deny that there may be excellent reasons for sending 3,000 men to Canada which we do not know; but we certainly can point to no reasons arising out of the existing state of things, so far as we are acquainted with them, which would lead to such a conclusion. There is no doubt that America is in arms from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico; that the authority of the State and National Executive, never very strong, is shaken, and in many places suspended, that the passions of a Democracy, which can ill brook the slightest contradiction, have been stung almost to frenzy by open revolt, and that for some unknown reason it has pleased the Northern States to empty all the vials of their wrath on the English nation. It is also certain that, in accordance with their habit of blustering against an unoffending neighbour, England is threatened with undying hatred and condign punishment, because in obedience to the first law in humanity and justice, we have declined to treat the people of the Southern States, carrying on war with the people of the Northern States, as pirates. This, according to the headlong logic of Democracy, is equivalent to a recognition of their independence, and although the Northern States themselves must be compelled in a few weeks to make this very same admission, it is an offence never to be forgotten or forgiven. We are, besides, fully aware that Canada has a long and a very vulnerable frontier, and that threats have been uttered which point not obscurely to an invasion, not of sympathizers as in 1837, but of free and enlightened citizens, who would come to punish us for not sufficiently sympathizing in their internal brawls. Nor are we ignorant that it is old and often-tried policy in America to seek to heal internal disorder by exciting popular hatred against England. In Canada itself affairs are by no means satisfactory. The relations between the English majority and the French minority cannot continue long as they are. Public confidence is shaken by the ill-success of the Grand Trunk Railway, by the vast amount of debt accumulated for municipal purposes, or, as it is said in order to bribe majorities, and by the return to the antiquated practices of Protection. In all these things, the force of which we by no means wish to extenuate, many may see a sufficient justification for the despatch of 3,000 men to Canada; but, for our part, if there are no better reasons than these, we regret that the step has been taken.

As regards the affairs of Canada, the more violent the internal discord, the more we regret that a large number of troops should be sent there; whatever the quarrels of the two races may be, it is clearly no part of our duty to take part in them. We are the friends of both sides, and can act for or against neither. The number of troops which we maintain in Canada is absolutely inconsiderable with reference to the magnitude of the country in which they are placed, or the number of the people by whom they are surrounded. Without troops we are strong enough to advise and arbitrate, but with a much larger force quite unable to compel submission to our will. Canada has the power of shaping her own destinies, and it is neither possible if it were wise, nor wise if it were possible, to interfere with the gradual unfolding of events. As for America, we fear we are about to give her the most ample satisfaction. Some six years ago, when our Departments, assisted by a Crimean winter had almost disposed of our army, while the war imperiously demanded fresh men, we bethought ourselves of recruiting in America. We speedily became awake to our folly, but had nevertheless to undergo the virtuous indignation of the American press and Government, justly irritated at us for supposing that within the borders of that orderly and peace-loving Republic there could be found any men base enough to dream of entering the service of a foreign Power.—Well, we are now going to offer to America a signal revenge. We send three thousand British soldiers, and with them a large store of excellent arms, to garrison a country, where they will live in complete idleness, hearing afar off the exciting rumours of battle and enterprise, so dear to a soldier's mind, and separated from the theatre of action sometimes by a few hours of lake navigation, sometimes by a river, sometimes by a narrow strait. Were it not for the extraordinary indignation manifested by America at our attempts to enlist six years ago, we should be very apt to expect that offers might be made to our troops to abandon the lazy monotony of Canadian life for a career of life and adventure under the Stars and Stripes on the banks of the Potomac. If our troops sorely tempt the virtue of American Statesmen, we feel little doubt that their virtue will be sorely tempted in return, and that their ranks will be more effectually thinned by inducements to desertion than they would be by the slaughter of a hotly-contested general action.

As to the necessity of providing against an attack by the United States upon Canada, we confess we see little reason to apprehend it. To quarrel with England would not be a means of putting an end to the contest, but rather of prolonging it, by giving the South a powerful, though a very unwilling ally. The war has come upon the United States so quickly and unexpectedly that they are forced, in the midst of their very heat and impatience for action, to delay, in order to drill their raw levies and provide themselves with the supplies indispensable for carrying on a campaign. Their force is not adequate to the work they have on hand, and they cannot afford to divide it.—There is no part in Canada as there was in 1837, to welcome the appearance of American sympathisers. On that point we believe the Upper and Lower Provinces to be perfectly united; but were this otherwise, Canada is by no means devoid of resources. Even were she without an imperial garrison it is quite time for this great, wealthy, and high-spirited colony to organise for itself those means of defence which she has so often used to such good advantage. Canada armed and on the alert has nothing to fear from invasion, and our troops are numerous enough to irritate, but not numerous enough either to intimidate or to defend.

The present position of Europe, though not looking any immediate breach of the peace, is full of anxiety. A master spirit has passed away from among us, and the turbulent and discontent elements which he held in abeyance will not be slow to show themselves. The time may not be as remote as we wish it when we may need every man that we can muster to protect our own shores. If the presence of our troops in America has a tendency to preserve peace, it may well be submitted to, but we fear that in the present state of mind, America is more likely to regard it as a challenge than as a precaution. The enlistment which we foresee is likely to promote good feeling between the two nations. The climate is very severe, and for more than six months our soldiers will be locked up in a country where they will have no means of movement, or of practically communicating with us. They will be sent at a heavy expense, for which, so far as we can see, we are not likely to gain any equivalent. In these days, it seems to us a rash and ill-considered policy which detaches the force of the nation to remote places and in small numbers, to do for our possessions the work they might fairly do for themselves, and to compromise us by their presence at critical moments in events from which we should do wisely to keep as far apart as possible.

MURDEROUS STABBING AFFRAY.

Between the hours of nine and ten o'clock last night, a murderous stabbing affray occurred in a barber's shop, a few doors north of Arkell's Hotel, Richmond street, in this city. The assailant is a colored man named Poston, who has been for the last two months in the employment of Mr. Bell, barber, and his unfortunate victim is a young man named David Farrel, who has acted on the Great Western Railway as brakeman for some time past, and who is well known in this city.

The circumstances of the affray, as near as our reporter could glean last night, are as follows:—About twelve o'clock yesterday Farrell visited the barber's shop for the purpose of having his hair dressed, and while there he got into an argument with Poston, and they abused other freely with their tongues. Bell, who was absent at the time, soon returned, and was informed of the difficulty by Poston, and he (Bell) reprimanded him for doing as he had done. About the time above mentioned, Farrell had been on his way home, and passing Bell's door, he observed Poston sitting on a chair, talking to the wife of Mr. Crabb, a shoemaker, who resides in the next house. Farrell walked up to him and renewed the controversy of the morning, and they both retired into the shop. Scarcely had a minute elpased before Farrell ran out, shouting that he was murdered; that Bell's barber had cut his bowels open.

He ran into Arkell's Hotel, and called the attention of a number of gentlemen who were in the bar-room to his bowels, which he held in his hands. They, of course, were horror-stricken, and for a few moments could scarcely realize the fact, but as soon as they understood that the unfortunate fellow had been stabbed, they immediately rendered what assistance they could. A bandage was placed upon the wound, and he was at once removed to his father's house, on Bathurst street. Doctors Brown, Woodruff and Payne, were soon in attendance, and the wound stitched, and every means resorted to for the purpose of preventing inflamation. The cut is a clean one, and extends about six inches in a straight line across the abdomen: it is stated that it was inflicted with a razor.

As soon as it became known that Farrell had been wounded, steps were at once taken to arrest Poston, but all the endeavors of the police were unsuccessful, and at the hour of our going to press he is still at large.

Farrell is a young man aged about twenty two years, and has a strong, robust constitution, which may enable him to get over the fearful injury which has been inflicted upon him, but the impression upon the minds of the physicians is against his recovery.

It is but just to state that Mr. Bell was entirely ignorant of the whole affair, and even now he does not know what was the origin of the dispute. He (Bell) has resided in this city for several years, and has always been looked upon as a quiet, respectable man.—London Free Press.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT—A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

(From the London Free Press.)

An accident of a most frightful character occurred on Thursday night during a meeting of the Forest City Lodge of Good Templars. In order that our readers may form an accurate conception of the unfortunate occurrence, it is necessary to premise that the rooms occupied by the Lodge are situated in the third storey of the Victoria Buildings, and consist of a spacious lodge-room, fronting on Richmond-street, and a smaller room in the rear overlooking a flat-roofed building in the occupation of Mr Crooks, saloon-keeper. The roof of Mr Crooks' premises is about six inches beneath the window of the ante-room mentioned and contains a very large sky-light.

On Thursday night, after the initiation of several persons into the Order, business was suspended for ten minutes, according to custom, to give the members of the Lodge an opportunity to become acquainted with the newly initiated, and a number of the brethren and sisters adjourned to the ante-room to spend the intermission in social intercourse. Two of the female members—Miss Mary J. Dreynes, and another whose name we have not learned—sat down on the sill of the window, and were engaged in conversation when a young man entered, and walking towards Miss Dreynes, offered his hand. The girl playfully refused it, and, apparently ignorant of the fact that a sky-light was immediately beneath the window in which she was sitting, she hastily stepped outside, and alighting upon the glass, fell through into the cellar, a distance of some forty feet from the roof.

The bystanders who witnessed the unfortunate girl's descent, instantly rushed down to the basement of the building—where she lay bleeding profusely amid fragments of broken glass—and carefully removed her to the Medical Hall, where she was speedily attended by Doctors McKenzie and Payne. On examination by these gentlemen, it was discovered that the only injuries sustained by the poor girl were a fracture below the ankle and several wounds inflicted on other parts of her body by broken glass. The wounds were promptly dressed, and every possible means having been employed by the medical men and others to alleviate her suffering, Miss Dreynes was conveyed to her home, where, we are happy to learn, she is rapidly recovering from the effects of the shock and the injuries received in her terrible fall. It was feared by her friends that she had sustained some internal injury, but we learn that there are, at present, no grounds for such apprehension; and it is the opinion of her medical attendants that in the course of a few weeks she will have sufficiently recovered to be able to resume her duties.

When the distance to which the unfortunate girl was precipitated, and other circumstances connected with the accident are considered, her escape from an instantaneous death is almost a miracle. It is certainly one of the most remarkable escapes that has come to our knowledge in many years.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS AT KINGSTON.

(From the Daily Press, July 5.)

On Wednesday the steamer Bonaventure arrived here with 204 men of the Royal Canadian Rifles, under the command of Col. Walker and few other officers. In addition to this effective force, there were also on board the steamer 191 women and 396 children. They are from Quebec, and will for a week to come be all stationed at this garrison. In about a week upwards of a hundred of the Rifles, we hear, will be dispatched to Niagara and the Welland Canal. Major Grange and Lieut. Pearce are spoken of as likely to move westward with the detachments. Since the arrival of the steamer at Navy Bay there has been much activity in the neighbourhood of the garrison wharf. The disembarkation of so many children was a scene that excited even more attention than the presence of the men. The greater portion of the troops were accommodated in the rooms of the barracks, though there are about eighty families of the new comers under tents at Point Frederick. The tents are small ones of the bell pattern, and to each family one tent is allowed. This gives the appearance of a miniature camp to Point Frederick, and the novelty of the scene may possibly attract visitors from the city.

The steamer Passport brought up yesterday another company of the Rifles from Quebec, which were landed at the Atlantic wharf, and marched to barracks. At the same time about 25 men, volunteers from the several companies in garrison, were placed on board the boat destined for Niagara. They were, we believe, under charge of Lieutenant Barrow.

Eight Companies of the 47th Regiment arrived on Friday morning by two Quebec steamers, and marched at once to the barracks in Montreal, accompanied by a magnificent band. They will camp out for six weeks on Logan's Farm, until the barracks is ready. The 47th accompanied General Wolfe at the taking of Quebec, and bore him off when mortally wounded.

THE COMET.

The New York Herald and some of the correspondents speak of the comet now visible as the great comet of Charles V. which appeared in 1264 and again in 1636, and was announced to return in 1838, but failed to keep the appointment. The Herald is not much of an authority on scientific matters, and until actual observations have been made of the course of the present comet, we would not hastily identify it with that of Charles V. "W. B." in a letter to the newspapers of London. C. W. gives what appears to be a sufficiently probable theory on the subject:—

"Many persons are asking the question, what comet is this which has come so suddenly into view in the northern heavens, and what have astronomers been about that they did not give us timely notice of the stranger's approach, so that we might at least have been on the look out for so splendid a visitor. I can only account for the apathy of the star-gazers by supposing they have been too much taken up with the war on the other side of the lines, or with the elections on this, or they would have kept us better posted up in our astronomy. By referring back to your papers for April last, you will find it recorded that Mr Thatcher, a person who exhibits a large telescope on the Park, Broadway, New York, upon the morning of the 4th April, discovered this comet, which was then approaching the sun. In the latter part of April it was seen passing through the quadrangle of the Great Bear, or what is called the Dipper, and was thus faintly visible to the naked eye to those who knew its position; it soon, however, got lost in the rays of the sun, and was not seen again for some time. It arrived at its perihelion, or the nearest point of its orbit to the sun, on the 4th June, and on Sunday evening last, the 30th June, it was again plainly to be seen after sunset above the horizon. It has a nucleus of the first magnitude, and with a tail extending to the zenith, fully ninety degrees in length. It is leaving the sun very rapidly, and appears to be taking the same route on its return by which it came, and will be again seen passing through the Dipper to-morrow morning on its way back to the realms of space. I should think, by its rapid movement, that we will not be able to see it long with the naked eye, and will only be able to follow it for a short time with the telescope. Many persons thought that this was the long expected comet, last seen in the year 1556, but it is not."

FINANCIAL MATTERS.

The American Government requires an enormous amount of money. Its expenditure is said to be a million a-day, and its income has fallen very far below that of former years. It must borrow, therefore, and that immediately and largely. If it throw its loan on the market in the usual way, capitalists will be appalled; the rate at which it will be taken will probably be ruinously low, and the clamor for a speedy compromise, so as to terminate the war, will be greatly increased. If the Government throw itself on the people, giving out debentures as small as ten or twenty dollars, bearing a good ratio of interest, say eight per cent, it may probably float off any required amount at or near par; as these debentures, besides being used as investments, will be extensively used as currency. The difficulties with the plan are to find any easier method by which the holder of such debentures as investment could draw interest periodically, and the continual calculations of interest, if passing from hand to hand as currency.

Another plan is proposed, namely to issue Treasury notes not bearing interest, (irreverently termed shin-plasters) for all payments of Government, which notes are to be redeemed in say two years, and in the meantime, to be received back by the Government for duties or public land. These notes—except what might be exchanged for desirable public lands, at a fixed price, which would be par value,—would obviously be worth at the very most their face, less the interest. Now, supposing they were at two years, and money at 6 per cent., they would be at 12 per cent. discount to begin with; or rather Gold would be at 12 per cent. premium, and all property and produce would rise 12 per cent. in price. The duties paid in such notes would really be at a discount of 12 per cent; and exchange on England and Canada would rise to a premium of 12 per cent. above the ordinary par value. This would be an artificial state of things, which would not fail to produce very great injustice, both when it came into effect and when it terminated; but, nevertheless, it might prove a less evil than some other alternative.

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1861.

TO OUR READERS.

The election is over, and we will again be able to publish our usual variety of reading matter. Much of our space has lately been taken up with subjects important to electors, though not to readers generally, but we will endeavor to make up the difference. We have labored earnestly in what we believed a good cause, and we think most of our readers will agree with us that we have not labored in vain.

The Election.

Close of the Polls.

COL. HAULTAIN PROBABLY ELECTED!

	513	462

It will be seen, therefore, that the result hinges on the polling in the Townships north of Bobcaygeon, yesterday. It is generally admitted that 50 votes could not have been polled altogether the second day, and of that number Col. Haultain would probably receive at least 4 or 5, making Mr. Conger's defeat certain. However, we will not, to use a homely phrase, "halloo before we are out of the woods," and we are content to await patiently the result, when we will have more to say on the subject. Be the news from the Back Townships what it may, Col. Haultain and his friends will have achieved a great victory. Considering the influences and the odds against them it is indeed one of the greatest election triumphs ever known, in that now their candidate stands at the head of the polls.

☞Immediately on receiving the returns from the back Townships we will publish an extra announcing the result. We will probably not hear before this afternoon.

THE RESULT.

DEFEAT OF THE MINISTRY!

Thus far, the result of the elections in Upper Canada has been decidedly in favor of the Opposition. The Ministerialists returned are:—

Brockville—Sherwood.
Carleton—Powell.
Dundas—Ross.
Hamilton—Buchanan.
Kingston—Macdonald.
London—Carling.
Middlesex, East—Portman.
Niagara—Simpson.
Norfolk—Walsh.
Ottawa—Scott.
Peel—J. H. Cameron.
Prescott—McCann.
Prince Edward—Anderson.
Simcoe, North—Morrison
Simcoe, South—Ferguson.
Toronto—Robinson, Crawford.
Welland—Street.—18.

The Oppositionists returned are as follows:—

Brant, East—Bown.
Cornwall—Macdonald.
Durham, East—J. S. Smith.
Durham, West—Munro.
Elgin, East—Burwell.
Elgin, West—Scoble.
Glengary—Macdonald.
Grenville—Patrick.
Halton—White.
Hastings, South—Wallbridge.
Lambton—Mackenzie.
Lanark, North—Bell.
Lennox and Addington—Hooper.
Lincoln—Rykert.
Middlesex, West—Scatcherd.
Northumberland, East—Biggar.
Northumberland West—Cockburn.
Ontario, South—Mowat.
Oxford, North—McDougell.
Perth—Foley.
Stormont—Ault.
Victoria—Dunsford.
Waterloo, North—Foley.
Waterloo, South—Cowan.
Wellington, South—Stirton.
Wentworth, North—Notman.
York, North—Wilson.
York, West—Howland.
York, East—Wright.—20.

There is but one doubtful man returned as yet, and it is hardly conceivable that he can support the ministry:—

Brant, West—Byerson.

There are seventeen constituencies yet to be determined, namely:

Essex.
Frontenac.
Grey.
Haldimand.
Hastings, North.
Huron and Bruce.
Kent.
Lanark, South.
Leeds and Grenville.
Lincoln, south.
Ontario, north.
Oxford, south.
Peterborough.
Renfrew.
Russell.
Wellington, north.
Wentworth, south.—17

The polling in all these seventeen constituencies closes to-day. So far as heard from, the Opposition candidates were ahead in four of them—the Ministerial candidates were ahead in four—and four had not been heard from. It seems probable, therefore, that the Opposition members returned from Upper Canada will be 40, giving a clear majority against the Ministry of 8! We heartily congratulate the country on the probability of this result. It is certainly not to be supposed a verdict as we had a right to expect against so corrupt a government, but it is at least sufficient to mark its fate forever.—Globe

THE UPPER CANADA TRAITORS

Of the twenty-six Upper Canada traitors, the following have been satisfactorily disposed of:—

Gowan—Compelled to withdraw!
Holmes—Compelled to withdraw!
Lount—Compelled to withdraw!
Macbeth—Beaten!!
Macleod—Compelled to withdraw!

Terrible Fire!

LINDSAY IN ASHES!

Loss $400,000.

Lindsay is in ashes! Nearly the whole town has been destroyed. The fire broke out between eleven and twelve o'clock in the morning, and by about four in the afternoon three-fourths of the town was smouldering ruins. Where the fire originated, we cannot learn with certainty. Some say at Cadwell's bake-house, other in a new building being erected for Mr Lysle, butcher. At all events it was in one of the buildings next to Jewett's Hotel. Every exertion was made to stop the progress of the flames as soon as discovered, but the wind was blowing violently at the time, and all efforts were fruitless. The fire soon reached Jewett's Hotel, and destroyed it in a few minutes. It then passed on the adjacent buildings, and large masses of fire were blown over to the store of Mr. Britton, and to the house of Mr. Lang, the Mayor. It then proceeded to Mr. Learys and the adjoining buildings, and on to the Grist and Saw Mills, destroying them both and about 300,000 feet of sawed lumber, and while it continued to spread in that direction, burning the bridge crossing the Scugog, the Alma Hotel, on the other side of the river, Moffatt's house, but (by a miraculous sparing the station and depot), in the other direction it communicated with the stable at the back of the Hotel recently occupied by Mr Funk. The stable was blown up, which, perhaps, assisted the fire. It then swept along both sides of Kent-street, until it reached the store of Mr Rodden, on the one side, and the store of Mr Dundas on the other, at the same time sweeping down the east side of William-street until it reached Payne's tavern, and W. McDonell's old house and new brick house on the street parallel with William-street. At this time the wind subsided, and the flames stopped in their mad career; but not until about eighty places of business, and twenty dwelling houses had been utterly consumed. After burning the Alma Hotel, the fire passed into the woods beyond, where at night the burning pines had the appearance of the terrace of a mighty city. But for the wind blowing almost due north and great exertions made to save the west side of William-street, scarcely a building in Lindsay would have been left standing. As it is there are scarcely any stores left unconsumed. Hundreds of the inhabitants have not a roof to cover them. The few houses left standing are crowded. Many will have to pass the night in the street. Our country friends who happened to be in town used every exertion to assist those who needed assistance. Some of the burning shingles were carried with the current a distance of ten miles.

The following are the names of the sufferers:—

Lysle, Butcher. J. Johnston, Tailor. Jewett, Hotel. Pearson, Saloon. Ward & Cadwell, Bakers and Confectioners.—Wheeler, Dry Goods and Groceries. P. Kleas, Barber. R. Green, Teamster.—Wm. Grace, Dry Goods and Groceries. C Britton, do., Geo Knapt, office. —Lenahan, dry goods and groceries. H Workman, Hotel. R Lang, dwelling. R Leary, general dealer. S & O Bigelow, general store. T Adams, post office. J Funk, Hotel. P W Fee, hardware and plaster. Dr Allanby, apothecary. Fink, railway conductor. Wm McDonnell, collector of customs. F Watt, lawyer. Lacourse, lawyer. T A Hudspeth, lawyer. Dr. Benson. Jewett, boot and shoe store.—Fournier, hotel. T Gourly, portrait gallery. W Hawkins, Alma Hotel. Allman's saw mill. Moffatt, shoe maker. Henderson, flour mill. Megill, Hotel.

Lost by Removal, &c.—H J Waite, 'Victoria Herald,' E D Hand, 'Advocate,' W Thompson, G H Keeve, and James Watson.

The total loss cannot be less than $400,000.

Several persons were injured, but none fatally. Besides a very large quantity of flour Mr Henderson the miller, had $3,000 in bank bills burnt. Mr Britton is reported to have had a box containing $16,000 stolen.

A subscription is being taken up to alleviate the sufferings of those who have neither food, raiment, nor covering.—Herald.

ACCIDENT ON THE G. T. R.

The mail train which passed Sherbrooke on Tuesday morning last, at 7 A. M. ran off the track one mile below Brampton Falls, in consequence of a truck wheel of the engine breaking. It was turned furiously from its course, and ploughed along deep in the earth a short distance, drawing the tender and car after it till it capsized—a mass of ruins. The engineer was thrown off and slightly injured. Immediately he was seen with others removing parts of the wreck and the wood in search of the fireman. We soon found him, but the poor man was badly bruised, and looked deathly. All were rejoiced to find him alive. After much care and attention on the part of the ladies, the man became revived, and a telegram was sent to Sherbrooke for medical aid. Dr. Johnson came and found him much injured, but thought he might recover. In four hours the track was cleared and repaired, and we again started, feeling deeply, as passed the scene of the disaster, that a merciful Providence had preserved us. Had we gone only a few rods farther before the wheel broke we should have been thrown from a bridge crossing the St. Francis, and buried in water sixty feet deep. The conductor deserves great credit for his prompt action and gentlemanly behaviour on this occasion.—Montreal Witness.

LATEST from EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "NOVA SCOTIAN."

Father Point, July 4.

The Nova Scotian passed Father Point at 4.45 a. m.

The bill to abolish Church Rates was brought up in the House of Commons for the third reading on the 19th.

Mr. Escourt moved an amendment that it be read that day three months. After some debate the vote was taken and resulted—yeas 274; nays 274; the Speaker gave the casting vote in favor of the amendment; the bill was therefore rejected amidst very great cheering from the Opposition.

The Queen has emerged from her retirement since the death of her Mother, and held her first Drawing-room of the season on the 9th.

An American ship, the Peter Marcy, from New Orleans, passed through Spithead on the 19th, with the flag of the Confederate States at the peak, and proceeded to Havre.

FRANCE.

Judgment has been given in the affair of the Monde newspaper. The charges of insult and libel brought against the proprietors were admitted by the tribunal, and Maleonet was fined 500 francs. Crampon was sentenced to 15 days imprisonment and 500f. fine.

ITALY.

The Turin correspondent of the Daily News says there is to be an experimental withdrawal of the French troops from Rome. They will retire in about a month, making a halt of observation at Civiti Vecchia.

PRUSSIA.

A statement has gone forth that the Prussian Ministry had resigned, but the Berlin Telegraph of the 9th ult. pronounces the report unfounded. The difficulty is said to exist because the King had resolved to retire an unpopular custom of paying personal homage to Sovereigns.

AUSTRIA.

In the Lower House or Council of the Empire the Minister of State announced that the Emperor declares the bill proposed in the Diet of Tyrol, against the emancipation of protestants to be inadmissable.

RUSSIA.

The Northern Bee says that up to the end of May insurrections of peasants had taken place, 141 villages of Podolia arising, from wrong interpretation of Imperial ordinances. Order, however, had been re-established.

Paris, Thursday.

M. Galignani asserts that the recognition of the kingdom of Italy has already taken place, and that on Saturday last, 15th June the necessary documents were dispatched to Turin.

Rome, June 19.

The Pope is again ill.

THE PERSIA'S MAILS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons on the 20th ult., Mr. Griffith asked whether government had received information that an Austrian envoy had recently arrived at Paris from Vienna, with a secret and confidential proposition from the Emperor of Austria to the Emperor of the French, to the effect that the two Emperors should co-operate to form an independent army for the protection of the temporalities of the Pope, and would engage to prevent Piedmont from entering the states of the Church.

Lord John Russell said the Foreign Office had received no official information, but a communication had been made by the French Ambassador, stating that the Austrian and Spanish Ambassadors at Paris had proposed in general terms, that the Catholic Powers should act in concert in maintaining the temporal power of the Pope, but the proposition had been rejected.

In the House of Commons on the 21st, Lord John Russell, in reply to an inquiry, said that Spain had given a pledge that, whether the annexation of St Domingo were accepted or not, slavery would not be introduced into the island.

The general parliamentary proceedings were devoid of interest.

The Daily News says it is understood that the Galway line will be suspended pending the issue of the question as to the subsidy.

FRANCE.

The rumor is revived that the Czar will this season visit the Emperor Napoleon at the Chalons Camp.

Captain Russell, who was appointed by the French government to report upon the performance of the Great Eastern in her voyage to and from New York, had an audience of the Emperor. Capt. Russell is stated to have expressed the opinion that a re-union between the Northern and Southern States is impossible, and that the establishment of two Republics is inevitable.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News learns that Mr. Dayton, the United States minister, had remonstrated against the assimilation of the Southern States of America to Italy, contained in the late article of Patrie, and reproduced by the Moniteur.

The Emperor was shortly to proceed to Vichy, and it was reported he would meet there the French Ministers from Constantinople, Rome, Madrid, Vienna, Berlin and probably from St. Petersburg.

Marshal Neil, it was said, would be sent to Turin to compliment Victor Emmanuel on the recognition by France of the new kingdom.

A Paris telegram of the 21st to the London Post says that the circular of the French Government to its representatives abroad, announcing to them the recognition of Italy, had been forwarded.

ITALY.

The matter of the recognition of the new Kingdom of Italy by France continues to be the subject of conjecture in the absence of any official announcement. There appears to be no doubt, however, that the recognition had actually taken place. The Opinione of Turin states that the note of recognition arrived at Turin on the 19th, and that it would be published so soon as the reply of the Italian government should have reached the Emperor.

There was a vague rumor that Baron Ricasoli hesitated to accept the recognition in the terms in which it was tendered. There was also a rumor, says the Paris correspondent of the London Times, that the annexation of the Island of Sardinia to France in return for France's recognition of the new kingdom, had been decided upon. On the other hand the Paris correspondent of the London Post writes that all that is said about new territorial possessions demanded by France, is radically false, and the question of the cession of Sardinia has notoriously never been raised. The same correspondent says the French government was merely awaiting the answer of the cabinet of Turin, in order to give an official form to the resolution.

Garibaldi's bill on the national armament, with some modifications, which had been approved of by the ministry, was discussed in the Chamber of Deputies. Petrucelli opposed the bill. He considered the French occupation of Rome an outrage upon Italy. (Great agitation.)

Petrucelli was called to order, and the general discussion on the bill terminated.

A dispatch from Rome on the 19th reports the Pope again suffering from illness.

The theatre at Rome had been closed, in consequence of a violent national manifestation.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT EASTERN.

MONTREAL, July 9.—The Steamship Great Eastern, passed Riviere du Loup, at 8.50 this morning. In the morning she was near the North Shore, and apparently going very rapidly.

The Great Eastern is supposed to have left Liverpool on the 26th of June, and has on board troops for Canada.

The Times continues to maintain that the Americans have no ground for their abuse of England beyond mortification at England's lack of appreciation. It says the Northerners have got themselves into a passion, and must be left to recover.

Sir Archibald Allison, in a letter to C. M. Clay, contends that the American Constitution is a failure, and recommends a National Church and Monarchy as the remedy.

The conflagration in London, briefly telegraphed by the Persia, was the most disastrous that had occurred for a generation. Immense piles of warehouses on the Surrey side of the London Bridge, filled with all kinds of produce, were destroyed. The loss exceeded £2,000,000 sterling; and some estimate the amount at from three to four millions.

The probable sales of Consols by the Insurance Companies caused a decline in the Stock Exchange. Some articles of produce had advanced in consequence of the great quantities of it consumed.

The recognition of Italy by France had been formally announced in the Moniteur by Baron Ricasoli in the Italian Parliament. The latter said that diplomatic selections between the two countries would be re-established.

The Roman question was still pending, and it was hoped that there would be a favorable solution of it.

The appeal in the case of Patterson vs. Bonaparte commenced in the Special Court at France on the 24th ult.

A party of Bourbonists landed near Syracuse and were arrested on the 23d.—They were subsequently shot.

The Italian Chambers had adopted the Bill in relation to the national armament.

The Pope was ill, but improving by the last accounts.

Hungary was reported to be in a state of insurrection.

The Chinese rebels had taken Hankow.

SECOND DISPATCH.

The Great Eastern left Liverpool about noon of the 27th.

The great fire in London was still burning in some vault, but was becoming gradually subdued, and all danger from further explosion was considered over.

The Prince and Princess Frederick William had arrived in England on a visit to the Queen.

The Prince of Wales will proceed on the 29th to the Camp at Curragh, Ireland, to take the round of Military duties.

Mr. Cobden addressed his constituents at Rochedale on the 26th. He eulogizes the French Government, and the commercial treaty with France. He denounces the volunteer movement in England, and ridiculed, as a ridiculous bug-bear, the idea of a French invasion.

Sir John Shelly, M. P., who was charged with indecently exposing his person, had been honorably acquitted. Mr. Train was wiped up in the charge, and the grossest for the defence asserted that he was actuated by Shelly's opposition to Train's street railways.

FRANCE.

Politics unimportant.

The Bourse was improving on the 25th. Rentes were quoted at 67f 65c.

The new treaty of commerce between France and Brazil is confirmed, it will involve a general remodelling of tariff duties.

SPAIN.

A royal decree admits cotton at much lower dues in Spain from September till January.

The Spanish proclamation, relative to the American war, says that the Queen is determined to observe the strictest neutrality between the Federal States of the Union and the Confederate States of the South. With this view it is prohibited to arm, build or fit up privateers, no matter under what flag in any Spanish port; ship owners and captains are prohibited from accepting letters of marque, and from prohibiting in any way the armament and fitting out of privateers, and prizes are prohibited from remaining over twenty-four hours in any Spanish port, save in case of urgent necessity, in which case the harbor authorities are to compel them to proceed to sea as early as possible, and not allow them to ship but what is necessary, and never under any pretext arm. No articles belonging to prizes may be sold. The carriage of goods to none of the blockaded ports is guaranteed, except war material and letters, which are prohibited; offenders are responsible for their own acts, and have no claim for protection. Spaniards are prohibited from taking service on either side, and to abstain from all acts which may be regarded as opposed to the neutrality. The decree is dated June 17, countersigned by Senor S. Colastec, the minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Chamber of Deputies on the 26th, debated the Bill relating to the loan of 500,000,000 francs.

Ferran opposed the bill, and attacked the whole system of Government.

Donosetta replied, and remonstrated that Government was following Count Cavour's system.

The debate was adjourned.

The official Gazette contradicts the report of the landing of the Bourbonists and disturbers of public orders in Sicily, and says that only three Bourbon brigades had landed there.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says, Rizzoli's note in reply to the French recognition is firm and uncompromising. He does not admit of reservation and declines entering into any engagement as to the future which would interfere with the completeness of the new Kingdom.

HUNGARY.

The funeral services at Pesth in honor wom in every variety of shape, color, and trimming. They may be divided into three classes—the Tudor, with broad, flat, turned up brim; the Clothilde, of an oval shape, also turned up at the side; and the bell shape. A new hat has just appeared—it is the shape of the Tudor hat in front, but comes down in a point behind on the neck. We do not think this hat is likely to be a favorite one, as it has rather a compleshous air. A pretty little round hat for a child of two years old is made of good plain straw, bound with skyblue silk velvet, and with two velvet rosettes in front, or a round tuft of white ostrich feathers. Bonnets are not quite so much raised in front as they were last season; still there is a great deal of trimming used at the top, and very little or more at all at the sides. Plain straw bonnets are only worn for mourning and simple toilets; whilst those for more dressy wear are made of tulle, crepe, white horsehair, rich straw, &c. Bonnets are generally lined with colored silk. This is very becoming, as the color that best suits the complexion can be choosen. The Charlotte Corday is the favorite shape for caps. It is very pretty, made with tulle illusions and pompounettes of ribbon. For morning wear the cap a la paysanne, of embroidered muslin, is the most worn. Wreath for evening coiffures are still much in favor but many pretty head-dresses are made with ruches of silk, mixed with bonde and flowers. Diadems of steel and gold, and also of pearl, are still much worn. Shirts are worn as simple and full as ever, and are generally gored to throw them out at the bottom. Mourning collars of cambric or fine linnen, are still worn very small. Those for demi-toilette, rather larger, of embroidered muslin, trimmed with rows of zero velvet, and rosettes in front. Undersleeves are made very full. Closed muslin sleeves have a straight cuff; but embroidered sleeves have generally a revers or bullonnee cuff. Very full open sleeves are also worn, trimmed to match the fichu.—We have seen some very pretty, open in front of the arm, with a ruche at the top of the trimming. This is very light and graceful. — Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine.

ODDS AND ENDS.

....."No day without an act of love," was the maxim of the benevolent Lavater. How many real woes would this relieve—how many fancied ones put to flight.

....Apathy is one of the worst moral diseases, as it not only incapacitates us from combating the encroachments of vice, but closes every avenue of our souls to the approach of virtue.

....Dr Franklin, being an editor, knew the value of time. He says: "Every little fragment of the day should be saved." Our experience has abundantly proved the truth of this aphorism.

....A pragmatical young fellow, sitting at table opposite Lord Eldon [John Scott,] asked him, "What difference is there between Scott and sot?" "Just the breadth of this table, was the reply.

....My party, Sir, will not lie in idleness," said a politician. "Very true, Sir," retorted his opponent, "your party is never chargeable either with lying in idleness, or with idleness in lying."

....A correspondent offers his services as a letter-writer, and warrants his epistles to "start a parent's tear, stir the expiring embers of affection, and awaken the full ecstasy of a lover's heart."

....A man with very large feet had a pair of boots that were much too big for him. "Why don't you sell them?" asked a friend. "I had them half sold [soled] once," was the reply.

....Idleness is the mother of mischief. The more a horse has done eating his oats, he turns to and gnaws down his manger. Substitute labor for oats, and virtue for manger, and what is true of horses is equally true of man.

....Charles Bannister, coming from a coffee house one cold and stormy night, said that he never saw such a wind. "Such a wind!" replied a friend; "what was it like?" "Like!" answered Charles, "like to blow my hat off!"

CENSUS—Bernard Gallagher, of Cavan, Ireland, returns: "This family had five children—three ones died within the last five years. There is no 1 deaf or dumb or blind in this family. This family is all of the Catolik profeshin. This family is all present—no 1 is absent. This is a mudwall house. This house has 2 windows in front and 2 in rair and a sky....."

.....Some people's notions of comfort differ from those of others. Matthews once went over Warwick jail, and when he came to "the place of execution," he observed to the jailor that, considering the extent of the country and the number of executions which might take place, the drop struck him as being very small. "I don't know," said the man; "to be sure, sir, 'could be crowded but there would hang very comfortably."

....The San Francisco Times has got its dander up. At the close of a long article entitled "Rumor of War," it bolus the following language: "If the country must go to fragments or to the devil through the treason of its people, let it go with colors flying, with guns flashing, and the smell of sulphur in advance. If it is to die, let it die with harness on. It was born in storms and tempests—let it die in earthquakes and flames.

....Such was the spirit of opposition between the proprietors of two rival coaches, that one has lately advertised to carry passengers at the following rates: "Inside, what you please; outside, ditto." This seemed to carry the matter as far as it would go; but the other party were not to be discouraged, and in a short time they issued placards, stating that their coach would take passengers at the following rates: "Inside, nothing at all, and a bottle of wine included, ditto, ditto.

MAN MISSING.

JOHN ABRAM, left Wm. Mocock's Axe Factory, in Peterboro', where he was employed, on Tuesday, 29th May last, since which time nothing has been heard from him. As it is supposed he was suffering from mental derangement at the time fears are entertained for his safety. He is an Irishman by birth, about 33 years of age, about 5 feet 7 inches in height, and had when he left a small under chin brown whisker; his hair is black. He wore when he left a black coat, black satin vest, speckled tweed pants and black cloth cap.

Any information respecting him will be thankfully received by his brother, THOMAS ABRAM, care of Mr. Wm. Mocock, Box 17, P. O, Peterboro', C. W.

Papers copying the above will confer a great favor on the friends of the missing man.

NO YANKEE HUMBUG!

PROSPECTUS

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL

Map of Upper Canada,

TOGETHER WITH A

DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY

OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF

N'TH & S'TH MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONLIN, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority; also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the boundaries and numbers of each County and Township, the great Lakes, Rivers, and principal Bell Streams, Tables showing the Variation of Time between each County Seat in Upper Canada from the Magnetic Observatory, Toronto, the Population of each City, Town, County and Township as also its gross, yearly, statistical and useful information, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province executed in the best style of the art.

There will be given on the above Map an enlarged Plan, in the most minute detail, of the above Townships, showing accurately, lots and subdivisions, with the names of the proprietors neatly engraved thereon. Also, School Sections, Churches, Schoolhouses, Mills, Manufactories, Stores, Inns, &c., together with one thousand gravel, plank and other Roads open to travel, the true course of rivers and small streams; also, enlarged Plans of Towns and Villages in the Townships.

The names of all Subscribers, resident on more of less will be inserted specially prominent on the Subscribers' lists, and the postmast of their residence solicited; also, the names of Subscribers in the Towns and Villages will be published, with the title, profession, business, &c. as such, thus constituting a complete Rural, Professional and Mercantile Business Directory.

The publishers being practical engravers, draftsmen, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 48 by 72 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvas, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4 50) payable on delivery.

Other Townships in the County will be canvassed in due time.

CAUTION.—This enterprise is in no way connected with that projected by Messrs. Tremaine, of Jefferson County, State of New York.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x38 inches, entitled,

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder-postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

MOTHERS TAKE HEED!

Do you when observing the uneasy actions of your children, consider that it may be more than a mere Chotic that afflicts them? In nine cases out of ten, the cause of the little sufferer's anguish is WORMS, and should be at once looked to.

HEADS OF FAMILIES

Do not let your children suffer, when we present you in

JUDSON'S WORM TEA

A SAFE AND PLEASANT CURE FOR WORMS

How much better and safer would it be to have it always in the house. A little delay when a child is taken ill may often be the cause of its death, while acting without delay, and by giving the MOUNTAIN HERB TEA immediately, you will not only save the child a long and tedious illness, and yourself much expense, but also feel happier in knowing that you have done your duty, and perchance saved its life.

This medicine is continued purely of

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE we present you with a perfect likeness of TECUMSEH, a chief of a tribe of the strongest Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," lose spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood in the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and dissolved. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These Pills not only purify the blood, but rejuvenate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Salt Rheum, &c. The Best Poison Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and restores all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, clearing and reinvigorating the vital organs.

Physicians! indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and assist the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints,	Debility,
Coughs,	Dropsy,
Colds,	Dysentery,
Chill Diseases	Headache,
Costiveness,	Indigestion,
Dyspepsia,	Inflammation,
Diarrhœa,	Jaundice,

Secondary Symptoms,
Tic-Doulourex,
Tumours,
Ulcers,
Venereal Affections,
Worms of all kinds,
Weakness from whatever cause,
&c., &c.

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very mysterious way among the Tecumseh, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting manner in which the "Mexican Herbalist" of the Aztecs.

OBSERVE.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Stamped Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the signatures of B. L. JUDSON & CO. on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, SCROFULAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidences of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Blootches, Piles, Rheumatism, Dropsies and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, or a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and other professional persons, have kind'y consented to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are fully given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no other. You will want the best and these is for them, and they should have it.

Health and its Pleasures, OR DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES: CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so seldom us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely by any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,
Consumption,	Scrofula, or King's Evil
Debility,	Sore Throats,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Dysentery,	Secondary Symptoms,
Erysipelas,	Tic-Douloureux,
Female Irregularities,	Tumours,
Fevers of all kinds,	Ulcers,
Fits,	Venereal Affections,
Gout,	Worms of all kinds,
Head-ache,	Weakness from whatever cause,
Indigestion,	&c., &c.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, as a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRESSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

COLONEL HAULTAIN.

Tune.—"Bonnie Dundee."

Hurrah for Reformers who have won the day,
(Success to our cause, three times three hurrah,)
Who rubbed to the polls their just rights to maintain,
Hurrah for Reform and Colonel Haultain!

Peterboro—famed in the country around,
In freedom and liberty's cause ever found
Has vanquished the Tories in our old domain,
And chosen the good man, Colonel Haultain.

He is the right man put into the right place,
Confronting corruptionists when face to face;
Their vile tricks and jobbery he will restrain,
Their schemes will be crushed all by Colonel Haultain.

At the Declaration he spoke loud and shrill,
To thousands of people on the Court-house hill;
He said their just rights he would ever maintain,
So the multitude cheered brave Col. Haultain

The "Defeated" came forward and thanked his friends all,
Then grossly insulted our kind Sheriff Hall;
But hisses and groans shat his mouth with disdain,
And loud cheers rent the air for Col. Haultain.

Our Member came forward with writings in hand,
And prov'd all was done by the laws of the land,
Which showed that the contest his friends did sustain,
Was quite lawful and just to Colonel Haultain.

Three cheers were then given for our member elect,
Three cheers for our Queen, whom all people respect;
Three cheers for our Sheriff, who good law maintain,
Hurrah for Reformers and Colonel Haultain!

A HUMOROUS SKETCH.

A STRONG CASE ON A HOT DAY.

In the city of H—— lived three persons—each eminent in their profession. As the wisdom of each will be fully apparent to the reader after perusing this sketch, we will first introduce Mr. Pomp Benton, the defendant in this suit. The plaintiff and defendant, both woolly heads of the blackest dye, had been discussing each others claim to the affection of Miss Dinah Down, a lady of ebony hue, until the warmth of their love, the warmth of the day, and the warmth of the whiskey internally, caused them to use language derogatory to the honor of gentlemen of color. Johnson, the plaintiff in this case, asserted that the defendant, Benton, was a hen thief, for which the latter gave him a blow between the peepers, which caused him to see starlight for the next half hour. When daylight appeared to this fallen Othello, he determined upon legal redress for so gross an outrage upon his person. Acting upon this suggestion, he appeared before Squire C—— demanding the arrest of Benton for assault and battery. The warrant was obtained and duly served upon the defendant, who immediately made tracks for the law office of Jim S——, whose skull, wit and cunning had rendered him famous among the disciples of Blackstone.

"What! here again!" inquired Jim, as Pomp's sable mug darkened the walls of his office.

"Yes, massa, I'is been sued," said the latter, assuming a look of sorrow.

"Sued, eh? What have you been sued for?"

"Well, you see, massa, I quashed a nigger."

"What business had you to quash a nigger?" asked Jim.

"Cause I couldn' help it; he called me a hen thief, and dis child couldn't stand dat."

"Did any one see you strike him?"

"Yes!"

"How many saw you do it?"

"Five or six colored persons."

"I fear I can do nothing for you this time," continued Jim, "the evidence is all against you."

Pomp seemed not to relish this remark at all, wiping the perspiration from his forehead with his coat tail and giving a deep sigh.

"What Justice issued the warrant?" inquired Jim.

"Squire C——," replied Pomp.

"Worse yet! worse yet!" exclaimed Jim.

Pompey's under lip fell an inch.

Jim saw that he had a desperate case, and felt assured that nothing but a powerful remedy would save his client. Leaning his head upon his arm, he seemed to be invoking the aid of the gods, at the same time taxing his fund of inventive genius to its fullest extent.

"Pomp," said he finally, "I think there is some hope for you if you will follow my advice strictly; but mark! the least departure from my commands, and you will not knock down another nigger for the next six months."

"Lordy, golly, alive, I'll do anything you tell me massa, if you will only get me out of this fix," exclaimed Pomp, rubbing his hands with delight.

"Now, then," continued Jim, "I want you to procure forty or more subpœnas, and see that they are duly served upon witnesses in this case; and now mark and remember that your fate entirely depends upon selecting the strongest smelling cusses you can find."

"Leave that to me, massa," replied Pomp knowingly, turning up the white of his eye. "I'll smell 'em out." How well Pompey performed the task assigned to him, the result will show.

The day of trial came, and a hotter sun never burned in the month of August. The thermometer ranged at 90 in the shade, and everything seemed parched by the hot air. Squire C——, before whose august tribunal this trial was to take place, deemed to feel the heat of the day with all intensity. His office was small, hardly capable of containing fifty persons, with one door for ingress and egress, and one window containing eight panes of glass. His office was small, while his body was large; and the ruby tint of his nose fully indicated that his obesity would never be lessened by a want of Monongahela. He was a thirsty old soul, and often felt it. Yet we will do him the justice to assert that no man ever more revered the cleanliness. He utterly abhorred dirt or stench in any form.

The hour of trial had arrived. Squire C——, sat in his large old-fashioned arm-chair, but he seemed to have lost the dignity of other days. He sat minus coat or vest, swaying a huge fan to and fro with a rapidity that gave evidence that Monongahela and the extreme heat of the day were acting fearfully upon his brain. Jim S——, the counsel for the defendant, was seated at the table, while the counsel for the plaintiff sat opposite.

One by one the witnesses arrived, encircling the Squire, who sat puffing like a porpoise. A smile of approbation crossed Jim's features as he saw how faithfully Pomp had performed his task, which the latter displayed a row of ivory at this mark of the keenness of his counsel's nasal organs. Still Pomp was not idle. He made the black wreath which encircled the Squire as compact as possible.

With an eagle eye, Jim watched the efforts of his client upon his Honor. It was but for a little time, as the latter broke the stillness of the Court by a sneeze which fairly resembled distant thunder. And well he might, for the heat and stench combined were beyond all endurance.

"Mr. S——," exclaimed the Squire, "I—I—I—s p-r-o-c-e-e-d w-i-t-h t-h-i-s c-a-s-e! I c-a-n't s-t-a-n-d t-h-e a-w-f-u-l s-t-e-n-c-h!"

Jim arose with all the dignity of a Hoffman in his palmiest days, informing his Honor that many important witnesses were yet to arrive, which rendered it impossible for him to proceed with the case until they made their appearance.

The Squire gave another sneeze louder than the last, at the same time spreading his huge arms right and left, knocking down half a dozen woolly heads, exclaiming, "stand back, stand back, for God's sake, stand back!"

One by one the black diamonds continued to arrive, while Pompey gave them explicit directions where to stand, and not to move.

At this stage of the proceedings the stench was almost beyond all human endurance. The heat of the day was great, but the effluvia emitted from the heap of sable knights which clustered around his Honor was still greater.

"Open that door," yelled the Squire, Pomp having taken the precaution to have it closed.

His Honor was evidently growing weaker and weaker as his legs fan whirled to and fro with less rapid strides.

"C-o-m-e, g-e-n-t-l-e-m-e-n, for God's sake, let's go on with this case," he exclaimed.

Jim again rose, assuring his Honor, with one of his blandest smiles, that it was quite impossible to proceed until the remainder of his witnesses had arrived.

"Benton!" yelled the Squire.

"Sah!"

"Where are you, you black scoundrel?"

"Here, sah!"

"You are clear, Benton, you are clear. Now, every d—d nigger out of here."

Like black shadows they came, and like black clouds they went away.

Pompey paid his counsel liberally for his cuteness and skill, at the same time assuring him that he should be the recipient of his law business in future.

"You is a great man on law," said Pomp "but it takes dis child to smell 'em out."

It would be needless to say that the Squire never granted any more warrants to gentlemen of color during dog-days.

THE MAN-FISH.

This curious creature is described in Cassell's Natural History, and it is evidently the source of the marvellous stories of mermen and mermaids so common in the legends of the deep.

This animal inhabits the mouths of the Amazon, Orinoco, and South American rivers. Its name (Manatee) has reference to the peculiar form of its swimming paws, these, as in the other genera, are composed of soft parts, and a membrane which enfolds the bones of the hands and fingers; but in the manatee, four flat nails are seen attached to the edge of the paw. The tail, also, is peculiar, being about one-fourth the length of the body, and oval-shaped, not unlike that of the otter. The head is round, attached to the body without a neck; the muzzle, in which the nostrils are placed, is large and fleshy; the upper lip cleft and bristled at the sides; the lower lip much shorter, and the mouth small.—The teeth, which are all molars, bear a resemblance to some cloven-footed quadrupeds. The grammar of the manatees and dugongs are pectoral, and this structure, joined to the adroit use of their finger-like flappers, have caused them, when seen at a distance with the outermost part of the body out of the water, to be taken for some creature approaching to human shape. The effect has been deepened by the thick set hairs of the muzzle, giving somewhat the appearance of human hair, or a beard.—Thus the Spanish and the Portuguese give the manatee a name which signifies Woman-Fish; and the Dutch call it the Dugong Beardmenseize, or Little Bearded Man. In this way, doubtless, some of our stories of mermaids have arisen; and "it is not at all improbable," says Bosmahy, "that the walrus has afforded foundation for others. I have myself seen a sea-horse in such a position that it required but little stretch of the imagination to substitute it for a human being; so late, indeed, was it that the surgeon of the ship actually requested to the last he had seen a man with his head and shoulders above the surface of the water."

GOOD GOVERNMENT.

Good forms of government are excellent things. They have always been favorite speculations with studious and imaginative men. From Plato to Rousseau dreamers have dreamt them out; from the Abbe Sieyes to Earl Grey men of action have been pleased to carry their theories into practice. They have not generally been a durable sort of manufacture, and they seem to last better when they grow spontaneously than when they are suddenly made. Of the manufactured kind France has at times shown herself capable of using up or wearing out two or three in a year. Earl Grey has several very neatly turned-out specimens at work in different remote parts of the world. As a class they are not very long-lived. One George Washington, aided by some cunning craftsman, produced the most promising of them all; but even this seems destined to last only a single lifetime. We have a statesman now in England who has seen it right through. The Peerage tells us that this veteran was born in Boston in 1772. He may therefore have seen the Boston Tea Riots, and have listened to the declaration of independence. He has certainly lived through three generations of American statesmen, and he now witnesses the shock which sunders the great American fabric in twain. These facts are not encouraging to constitution-mongers, or to framers of new forms of government.—Times.

THE LATE LORD CHANCELLOR.

The Times of Monday, June 24, gives the following particulars with reference to the death of Lord Campbell:

"The public will sympathize with us in the deep regret with which we announce the sudden death of Lord Chancellor Campbell. He died yesterday morning. He had attended a Cabinet in the course of the day and had entertained a party at dinner on Saturday evening with that keen and hospitable enjoyment of society which always distinguished him. He retired to rest in his accustomed health and spirits, and passed away without giving the alarm. Shortly before eight o'clock yesterday morning, his servant upon entering his bedroom found him seated in a chair motionless, with his head thrown back and blood oozing from his mouth. Medical aid was immediately in attendance, but he had evidently been dead at least two hours. It is believed that the cause of death was the rupture of one of the great arteries in the region of the heart."

GLUTTONY.

The rich man's mode of living is preposterous. Mixtures, and spices, and wines, are the ruin of half the stomachs in the world. Just see. You take at dinner, soup; a glass or two of some punch, perhaps; turbot and rich lobster sauce, with it, may be an oyster pate, or a sweetbread, to amuse yourself with, while the host is cutting you a slice of the Southdown haunch; this with jelly and French beans, is set in a ferment with a couple of glasses of champagne, to which a couple of glasses of hock or sauterne are added; a wing of a partridge or the back of a leveret, solaced with a little red hermitage, succeeds; then you sit once sit at ease and cool your heated stomach with a piece of iced pudding, which you prepare to speedily proceed to warm again with a glass of noyeau, or some other liquor; if you are not disposed to coquette with a spoonful of jelly in addition, you are sure to try a bit of Stilton and a piquant salad and a glass therewith. At dessert, port, sherry and claret fill up the picture. This is about the routine of the majority of dinner parties. Now put all these things together in a bowl, instead of the stomach, and contemplate the noxious, fermenting mess. Is it not enough to kill an ostrich? Such a dinner is, in fact, a hospitable attempt on your life!

AFRICAN PECULIARITIES.

A recent African traveller, Mr. Petherick, tells some funny stories. One tribe that he encountered used to steal his tobacco and smoke his pipes. He filled a pipe, placing among the tobacco some gunpowder and told them that the pipes were so indignant at being used by them, that, if smoked again, they would evince their displeasure. One of the chiefs, in the traveller's absence, "tried it on," again,—and the pipe exploded into fragments. After this, the traveller was looked on as a prophet, and his goods were not meddled with. Another tribe had a singular mode of salutation. The chief spit in his face. At first he decried it as an insult, and thought of knocking the chief down; but contented himself with spitting back. This, as it proved, was the right thing to do, and it was received as a civil response to a courteous overture.

SPURGEON'S LAST.

A certain elderly minister from the country called upon Mr. Spurgeon and congratulated him on his success, but said it was a pity he indulged in eccentricities, and so on—in short gave him some fatherly advice, which Mr. Spurgeon seldom receives with patience. On the occasion he took this response from his pocket, and said, "Dr. B—— the other day I was so interrupted by an organ grinder, that I gave him three pence to go away. Now, will you take the same sum, or shall I make it suspense?" The Doctor immediately brought his lecture to a conclusion, and now relishes the story with great glee.—Court Journal.

....Why is your father's mother like the tallest soldier? Because she's a grenadier.

....Who's right?" asked a officer of his company. "Indeed, said an Irishman with stand near by, changing his aim, "it's no property, and I'll be dead as I please while I'm alive."

CHEAP WHISKEY.

DEATH & Co.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Spirits,

TAKE this opportunity of informing their friends and a discerning public that they continue the trade of making drunkards, Bankrupts, Beggars, and Maniacs, on the most reasonable terms, and on the shortest notice.

The advertisers beg to return their most sincere thanks to their numerous, steady and attached customers, and to all the tippling part of the community, for the increasing countenance and extended patronage which they now receive; and they hope that the many proofs which are to be found in every City, Town, Village, and District of Canada, of the success of Death & Co., in the above line of business, will secure to them the increasing support of Drunkards, Dram-drinkers, and occasional Customers, as well as forever silence the advocates of Temperance Societies, those bitter enemies of this long-established and popular trade.

Death & Co. beg to assure the public that the article in which they deal is the best and most pleasant poison in the world, and has never been known to fail in any instance where the individual has persevered in the use of it for the limited time which D. & Co., prescribe.

In order to do business in a respectable style, the advertisers have obtained a license from the Magistrates, under whose benevolent auspices they have increased their facilities for bringing the wives and families of their customers to misery, and to wound, maim, and beggar, and drive to delerium and death, as many as the public good requires; and, in particular, Death & Co. will spare no pains to secure the eternal damnation of as many as favour them with their countenance and support. To accomplish these desirable ends, it is only necessary for the individual to take half a glass occasionally, till he feels that quantity insufficient to satisfy the craving appetite which it will soon create; and when once this whiskey-appetite is formed, the results at which Death & Co., aim at are secured, as the person is then prepared to brave temporal and eternal misery for the sake of "another glass."

For the accomodation of their numerous customers, and for the dispatch of their increasing business, Death & Co. have appointed a sufficient number of active agents, who are stationed at convenient distances in the streets of cities, along the highways and arem-roads, and in the villages and country places. Death & Co.'s agents may be known by the red-curtained windows, and having two pewter mugs over their doors "Licensed to sell Wines and other Spirituous Liquors," and may be found ready for business at all hours, by day or night, Sundays not excepted.

Satisfactory References can be given to the Bridewells, Lunatic Asylums, the Gaols, the Gallows, or the Drunkard's Fire-side.

Death & Co. beg to caution all Tipplers, Dram-Drinkers and Drunkards from taking heed to whatever Parsons, Medical Men, and all Advocates of Temperance Societies may say against Spirit-drinking, as those gentlemen are avowed enemies of this respectable soul-and-body-destroying business.

QUEEN VICTORIA IN HER OWN CAPITAL.

One night is often to be seen in Hyde Park when strikes a republican as rather strange. You are leaning against the rails, idly watching the ceaseless flow, when all at once, as suddenly as if by the word of command, though not by word of command, every one of the carriages pulls up on one side, the equestrians do the same, and two scarlet groomsmen gallop by. Immediately behind, in a plain carriage, is a lady, with a good color, rather stout, with a baby or daughter, or female attendant. There is nothing particularly remarkable about her; yet every hat is lifted, every head is bared, and toward that matron lady every eye is turned; and no wonder, for that is Victoria, England's Queen! She reigns for her virtue supreme in the affections of Englishmen. An Englishman is proud of his country, but above all of his Queen. However remote from his own island home, "The Queen!" is the first toast at all public festivities where Englishmen are congregated,—"The Queen, God bless her!" In England there is an immense respect to rank and wealth. In this case the highest rank in the land is filled by a woman, and that woman a wife and a mother, and, in all relations of life, a pattern to her people.—No wonder that John Bull gets red in the face as he shouts, with might and main,

"Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us
God save the Queen!"

A YANKEE AT A RESTURANT.

An American in Paris went to a restaurant to his dinner. Unacquainted with the French language, yet unwilling to show his ignorance, he pointed to the first line on the bill of fare, and the polite waiter brought him a fragrant plate of soup. It was very well, and when it was dispatched he pointed to the second line. The waiter understood him perfectly, and brought him a vegetable soup. "Rather queer soup that I want," thought he, "but it is Paris fashion." He duly guarded to the third line, and a plate of tapioca broth was brought to him. Again to the fourth, and was furnished with a bowl of preparation of cocoa-nut. She tried the fifth line, and was supplied with some great kept dishwater. The bystanders now supposed that they saw an unfortunate individual that had lost all his teeth, and our friend, determined to get as far from the soup question as possible, pointed in despair to the last line on the bill of fare. The intelligent waiter, who now at once what he wanted, politely handed him a bunch of tooth-picks. This was too much. The American paid the bill and left.

PRESERVATION OF HEALTH.

1. Abstain from all spirits and dram-drinking. Spirits rob the muscles, diminish the strength of the body, and render more susceptible of disease.

2. When mild-brewed beer agrees, keep to it as a beverage [at your meals only.]

3. Where (well filtered) water does not disagree, value the privilege and continue it. Pure water is far better beverage for the sedentary and those who take but little exercise, and for those whose labor or unhausted condition does not require any stimulants.

4. The quantity (of most things) is always more hurtful than the quality.

5. Take your meals at regular hours always. The human frame is capable of being changed from sickness to perfect health by a well regulated system of diet.

6. Avoid everything—however agreeable to the palate—that from experience you find to disagree with you.

7. Make daily ablution the first thing on rising; you will feel stronger and more refreshed for it during the day. I fancy I hear you say that you have not the time to do so. My answer to you is, rise ten minutes earlier, dip a course towel in cold water, wring it out, and rub the whole body over. "Cleanliness is next to Godliness!"

8. Never quack or tamper with your constitution by taking patent medicines; "they are offered for every kind of disease, for many of which they are decidedly prejudicial, producing very often fatal results. If slightly indisposed (and if it is possible to do so,) remain quiet, avoiding all excitement and abstain from all meats and fermented liquors during the day. In headache and slight fever, this plan mostly affects a cure. Never use strong purgatives. If costive, take a mild dose of castor-oil; if too relaxed, a dose of Gregory's powder, (kept at all chemists); and, five or six hours after the powder, take the following mixture:—Prepared chalk, 1 drachm; spirit of sal volatile, 10 or 12 drops; cinnamon water, two ounces; mix.

9. Take exercise, if you value your health but proportion it to your strength. The mind taints by too long sitting:

Better to hunt in field for health unbought,
Than fee the doctor for a nauseous draught
The wise for cure on exercise depend;
God never made His works for man to mend

10. Never learn to smoke; shun tobacco in all its forms. It stunts the growth when taken at too early an age; it is a great promoter of indolence and laziness; it has nothing nourishing and stimulating in it, but is merely a narcotic, of which the moral and physical effects upon those who use it are of a very dubious character.

11. If you have exceeded the bonds of temperance, or in plain English been tipsy, then take the following mixture: Liquor ammon. acet., half an ounce; tinct. rhei. two drs.; mix the above with a glass of ginger-beer—and remain sober afterwards.

ONE OF THE STORIES.

Says C. A. B., I heard an anecdote the other day, which amused me very much. I will give it you. It is on good authority—an officer who was at the mess when the conversation occurred.

A brother officer (noted as a "Munchausen") was entertaining a mixed company with several stories of his exploits, a la "Gordon Cumming," amongst the lions and tigers of India." Once he was out lion-hunting, and had spent all his ammunition, when an old lion came up.

"At first," said the narrator, "I thought to fly—but on second thoughts, I remembered it had been said, to be possible to mesmerize an animal! whereupon I concentrated my forces, and brought my eye to bear upon him. Presently his tail dropped, and he retired backward, leaving me master of the field. Proud of my victory, I went out unarmed the next day, and met the same old lion; and again tried mesmeric influence; he was preparing to give way, when a rustle in the jungle caused me to waver, and in an instant, he would have sprung on me, before I could mesmerize him again, if the officer in the jungle had not shot him dead."

An old officer who was laughing at the boldness of the fib, carelessly said:—

"I was the man who fired the rifle."

In no way dismayed, the other walked across the room with much empressment, saying:—

"Give me your hand, I owe you my life."

My friend says it was one of the most admirable fibs he ever saw; the lion-hunter not being thrown off his centre for one minute.

A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.

A man living at Nantyglo, near Bristol, who keeps pigeons, a few days ago came to the resolution to decrease his number by shooting some of the young birds, taking care he did not injure one of the old ones. This was rather a difficulty; but after he had stalked from one side to the other for some time, with the loaded gun in his hand, four of the young birds stood well for a shot, and he fired. Down fell three pigeons, quite dead, and a fourth, being wounded, fluttered about. But the shot produced other results more remarkable. Seven panes of glass in a house in the distance were broken; and a basin of broth and spoon were thrown down, the basin being broken and the broth spilt. The smoke so startled a man who was at dinner, and who had not been able to move from rheumatism for months without his crutches, that he ran to the front door without them, and commenced jumping about in front of the house, believing that he was shot in the forehead, although thereabouts no mark to be seen.—The man who had discharged the gun, becoming alarmed, hastened to the cottage as soon as possible, and finding that he was not hurt, told the woman of the house that he would pay all damages done to the window. She, however, was not willing to receive a farthing, saying it was the best thing that had happened to her for a long time, and she would willingly pay all damages herself; as they had been trying a great many remedies before, all to no purpose; but now the man was quite cured, and she could not think of taking anything. The gentleman, however, insisted on paying. The cured man went to work on the morrow, and has not touched his crutches since. The sportsman belongs to the 2nd Gloucestshire Rifles, which may now safely assert that it possesses one of the best shots in the world—a man who killed three birds, wounded a fourth, broke seven panes of glass, and cured a rheumatic cripple, all at one shot.—England Paper.

AN UNDESIRABLE RESIDENCE.

There is no doubt about it—Fort Pickens is a dreary place. It has all the elements of discomfort, and not a solitary attraction. The island on which it is located is all sand, every bit of it. Not a grain of corn or blade of grass will grow on it—nothing vegetable, not even a thistle. Not an animal could live on the native productions of the soil, excepting perhaps the hog, which they say eats rattlesnakes. Dig down into the earth as deep as you please, and you get sand. Let the wind blow, and your eyes and ears, your dentrifice, and the valuables of your teeth are filled with sand. Take an evening promenade on the ramparts, and with ten rods on the breech, and your boots and your stockings, even unto your tin-ends are filled with sand. You cannot escape from this into the water for a ten-shooting sea-bath without re-using the risk of being devoured by sharks. If it is calm, the air is impregnated with fever, and alive with flies. To escape the burning hot sun, go into the damp casemates and acquire rheumatism. Whether it rains or shines, you have flies by day and mosquitoes by night—these all the time. There is only one species of entomicale exterminator which does not prevail here, namely, bedbugs; and this is a deficiency which can easily be provided for. The heat is intense and almost intolerable. It scorches the few tufts of grass that aspire to grow on the thinnest soil, and bakes the moistened sand as solid as a brick. It is steady and persistent. It continues all day long, and all night, and thereby gains accumulative force, and adds to its next day's intensity. If you put a mosquito-bar over you, you roast—if you don't do it you are pestered by flies, bitten by mosquitoes, and become nervous and irritable. Beside all this the water is bad. Its taste is inexcerable, and its smell disgusting.—Letter from Fort Pickens, in Tribune.

☞ A Yankee letter-writer abroad disposes of several notables than the French Emperor in pegging away vigorously at his life of Cæsar; the Pope is suffering still from erysipelas, old age and general debility; Francis Joseph of Austria is sadly given to drink; Queen Victoria, although able to hold a drawing-room, has really been seriously affected, nervously and otherwise, by the death of her mother, and other causes; Garibaldi is now as well as usual—has never suffered from more than an ugly rheumatic gout or gouty rheumatism. The Princess Mary, of Cambridge, whose betrothal to the Duke of Newcastle has been announced, is a very comely personage, but very stout—so stout, in fact, that she finds crinoline entirely superfluous, except around the bottom of her skirt; and it is said that it has been necessary of late to enlarge the door of her carriage. A marriage was proposed between her and Victor Emanuel, and he was delighted at the prospect of a connection with the royal family of England through the owner of so charming a face as that of the portrait which was shown to him. But when on his visit to England, he saw the lady, il Re galantuomo—himself no slender lad—he retired precipitately from the negotiation. "I cannot marry that woman," said he, "she's broad enough to sit upon the seven hills of Rome."

TOO LATE.

Perhaps these two little words had never a more sad or bitter significance than in the little story of real life we are about to relate. About a month ago all Ingerwood was shocked at the death, under frightful circumstances, in a house of doubtful reputation, of a parish named Wallace, a solicitor by profession. He had wandered in there in a state of destitution suffering from the effects of drink. His wants were relieved, but furious madness (the consequence of delirium tremens) came on, and he had to be removed to the Camp, in a frightfully bruised condition, where he died in a few hours. See, now, the strange contrast.—Had this man, who died in penury and destitution, a victim to debauchery and disease, but lived a few weeks more, he would have found himself heir to a splendid fortune. In fact, before he died—unknown to himself—he was the possessor of immense wealth.—By the last mail news has come out that, from an uncle of his who died intestate, property worth £100,000 reverted to him.—Sydney (Australia) Advertiser.

Be Kind to your Mother.—"What would I give," said Charles Lamb, "to call my mother back to earth, for one day to ask her pardon upon my knees for all those acts by which I grew her gentle spirit pain."—Remember this children, and be kind to your mother.

....A gent while being measured for a pair of boots, observed "make them over the instep." "Measure!" exclaimed the astonished artist, surveying his customer from head to foot, "I have not leather enough."

...."Jemmie," said a venerable Connecticut to his daughter, who was asking his consent to accompany her urgent and favored suitor to the altar, "Jemmie it is a very solemn thing to get married." "I know it, father," responded the sensible damsel; "but it is a great deal solemner not to."

....An old farmer in southern Illinois, seeing the engines at Cairo, remarked that "them locos manœuvring had corrupted a heap of land."

THE GREAT FIRE IN LONDON.

The metropolis on Saturday evening was visited by one of the most terrific conflagrations that has probably occurred since the great fire in 1666. Certainly, for the amount of property destroyed, nothing like it has been experienced the last half century, losses being estimated at £2,000,000. The scene of this catastrophe was on the water side portion of Tooley Street, near London Bridge—a locality which has been singularly unfortunate during the last 25 years—some of the largest fires having occurred there. The outbreak took place in the extensive range of premises known as Cotton's wharf and bonded warehouses, belonging to Messrs. Scovell. They had an extensive river frontage, and the whole space on the land side extending to Tooley Street was covered with eight or nine massive brick warehouses, six stories in height, some of which were formerly occupied as ordinance (government) stores, the whole occupying, as we were informed, about 3 acres. These buildings were filled with merchandize of every description. There were some thousands of chests of tea and silk stored in the upper floors, while in the lower ones there was an immense stock o' Russian tallow, various oils, bales of cotton, hops and grain. Every portion of the entire establishment might be said to have been loaded with goods, and of the whole of this very valuable property, said to be valued at upwards of a million, not a vestige remains but the bare walls and an immense chasm of fire, which at dusk last evening lighted up the East and the east end of the city. To be added to this very serious loss is the destruction of the whole of the western range of Alch Humphrey's warehouse flanking the new dock, known as Hay's wharf, the burning of four warehouses and quay, comprising Chamberlen's wharf, adjacent to St. Olave's Church, besides many other buildings in Tooley Street.

The saddest loss of all, however, was the deplorable accident which befel Mr. James Braidwood, Director of the London Fire Brigade, who, it will be seen by the subjoined details, perished at an early stage of the fire. The writer, who accompanied Mr. Braidwood to the fire, and was an eye witness of the accident which happened to that gentleman, furnishes the following:—Intelligence of the outbreak reached the head-quarters of the brigade in Watling Street at ten minutes to five o'clock, and all the available force and engines belonging to that establishment were at once dispatched to the spot. Reaching the western avenue in Tooley Street, leading to Cotton's wharf, a dense quantity of smoke was observed issuing from the doors on the first story of one of the main centre bonded warehouses abutting on the wharf, and in a line with other warehouses stretching to Tooley Street. This centre building had only been recently erected, and its construction gave rise to some dispute between the Insurance Company and Messrs. Scovel, which, we are informed, had only been arranged a few days since.

Mr. Braidwood surveyed the course of the fire with his usual cool and practical eye, and posted his men where the best command could be had over the seats of destruction. About half past seven o'clock he entered the gateway leading to the wharf nearest St. Olave's church, and proceeded down the avenue, where four of his men were supporting and directing two branches from the floating engine. By this time the warehouse in which the fire commenced was gutted; but the enormous stock of tallow which had been stored in the lower floor caused the flames to rise to a considerable height, and, if anything, raged more furiously when water was scattered over them. The adjacent building also contained a large quantity of cotton and oil, which ran down through the loop-holes in a stream to the vaults as the warehouses ignited. At intervals there were loud reports, as if from the explosion of carboys or barrels of oil; but at the time it did not excite any particular alarm, as the firemen had been assured that those warehouses contained no explosive material, such as saltpetre, although there was a large stock of it in another part of the wharf. The police, who by this time had got command of the thoroughfares leading to the wharf, and cleared the western gateway or avenue, and with the exception of the firemen, there were only a few standing by. Mr. Braidwood, who had visited the men several times previously, seeing the distressed state they were in from the intense heat and their great exertions, called one of his attendants and gave each of them a "nip" of brandy, and then noticing another of his men in a similar exhausted state, and whose eyes had suffered much from the heat, turned his back on the warehouse to give the man some of the brandy. At this moment a terrific explosion occurred, and in an instant it was seen that the whole of the frontage of the second warehouse was coming down, falling outwards into the avenue. Mr. Henderson, foreman of the southern district of the brigade, who was standing within a few paces of Mr. Braidwood, shouted for them "all to run." The men dropped their branches. Two, with Mr. Henderson, escaped by the great gateway, and the other men ran in the opposite direction on to the wharf, where they jumped into the river. Mr. Braidwood made an effort to follow Mr. Henderson, but it was only momentarily, for he was struck down by the upper part of the wall and buried beneath some tons of brickwork. His death must have been instantaneous. Several of his men would have rushed to extricate him, and indeed some did, hopeless as the task was, but another explosion happened causing the men to fly in great terror. The sad fate of this gentleman had a most depressing effect upon all, and to add to their trouble the conflagration had assumed a most awful ascendancy. It is stated that there were three men standing by at the time, and it is feared that they have perished.—We are in a position, however, to state Mr. Braidwood is the only member of the fire brigade who has perished.

A TERRIFIC NIGHT SCENE.

Towards ten o'clock the aspect of the conflagration had become quite appalling and terror and dismay existed upon all. The continual explosions of saltpetre destroyed all the windows of the surrounding warehouses on both sides of Cotton's wharf, on the shattering the loop hole doors of the various floors. By this means the great warehouses of Mr. Alderman Humphrey, forming the western division of Hay's wharf and dock, nine stories in height, and extending inland some hundreds of feet, ignited, together with a large warehouse in Hay lane, adjoining the land side entrance to the wharf. On St. Olave's church side of Cotton's wharf the fire was making an rapid progress, having penetrated the four extensive warehouses comprising Chamberlain's wharf, besides many houses and other buildings in a line with Tooley street.—That they must share a similar fate as that of Cotton's wharf was evident; and what rendered matters worse, the firemen were comparatively powerless. The two powerful steam floating engines were compelled to be hauled away, in consequence of the thoroughfare which passed over the wharf wall and covered the surface of the river the whole length of the burning warehouses; as it was they had lost a quantity of hose by the walls being blown down. Three steam land engines, built for the brigade by Shand & Mason, were working vigorously in Tooley street, but the overpowering heat prevented the men approaching the river near enough to be of any practical service. Indeed the duty was fraught with great danger, and they were very properly called off. The whole of the carriage way of Tooley street was ankle deep with hot oil and tallow, which flowed in all directions from the warehouses, and the fear was that it would by some misfortune be brought into contact with turpentine and get ignited.

From the inquiries made of the brigade authorities it is impossible to tell the exact number of persons who have lost their lives by the disaster, but it is satisfactory to state that none of the firemen have lost their lives beyond Mr. Braidwood, and as far as the search made for the latter gentleman, the brigade are of opinion that the three gentlemen supposed to have been killed at his side have escaped before the wall was blown down. A gentleman named Scott, who had a large stock in the warehouses on the wharf, has not been seen since the commencement of the fire, and his friends are apprehensive that if he has not been buried in the ruins he has been drowned. Mr. C. White, on the County Fire Office; Mr. Hodsoll, Jr.; Sub-Engineer Palmer, as well as Mr. Henderson, upon seeing the walls falling, ran towards the waterside, and by that means saved their lives; but Mr. Braidwood turned towards the contrary direction, and Mr. Henderson saw the wall fall like a large tent over his head, and some of the men standing near say that they actually saw the bricks over his body rise after he had been prostrated by their great weight, and read with heat. To get to the unfortunate gentleman was then impossible, owing to the explosions that succeeded each other in rapid succession, and the flames rushing completely across the waggon road. There alternative but to let the body remain until such times as the fire could be somewhat got under, which could not be accomplished until yesterday morning.

SECOND OUTBREAK OF THE FLAMES.

Owing to the many floating policies upon the property stored in the different warehouses, and the owners living at such long distances, it is, as yet, impossible to find out the losses the respective persons have sustained. Messrs. Scovell's wharf alone, at least those portions destroyed, consisted of seventeen tremendous warehouses, similar in construction and size to the London Docks, and contained a similar description of goods, the most explosive and dangerous being saltpetre, sulphur and oils. In some of the other warehouses were hemp, jute, rice, and spices, such as mace, (a very inflammable article) pimento, of which there was over twenty tons, immeasurable barrels of ginger, over 1,000 tons of rice, and a vast amount of artist's and other colors; but to tell the exact amount of Russia tallow and oils in the various buildings is at present impossible. One immense warehouse, four floods high, was stocked in every part with colonial produce, worth nearly £100,000. The seeds of various kinds in another warehouse adjoining are stated to be worth £150,000. Gums, shellac, arabic, dragon, gambouge, and cochineal were stored, which it is stated were worth £180,000. This building had fire proof iron doors, and the property might have been saved had the doors been closed, but, unfortunately, they were all left open. The warehouses on the other side of the premises were also divided by double iron doors, but as in the case of the other building they were left fully open, and when the flames caught the spices, especially the mace, it burst like gas, the oil that ran from it, as the top part of the cases was on, flew along the flooring like streams of running gas. Every one who had anything to do with the wharf then became convinced that all they could possibly do would be of no avail in saving the property, unless they could manage to close the iron doors, but that they could not do, owing to the fury with which the flames rolled out of the windows and loop-holes with terrific violence and grandeur.

The warehouses near Chamberlen's wharf contained stock in trade of nearly half a million in value, consisting of glue, jute, varnish, paints, colors, white and pig lead, oils, tallows, guns, &c., and other articles of drysaltery. There were likewise in the premises soft soap (in Scotch casks) resin, sugars, teas, coffee, and an immense cargo of black and white pepper, the latter said to be worth £5,000. This proved to be of great inconvenience, as it caused much pain to the firemen, for as the condiments became ignited and the water fell upon it, the spice entered their eyes, and greatly injured their power of seeing.

It has been ascertained that the following goods were recently lying at Cotton wharf, most of which are destroyed by the fire:—Sugar, 878 tons; coffee, 420 tons; cocoa, 318 bags; rice, 4,477 tons; pepper, 241 tons; ginger 30 casks, 787 cases and 162 bags; cassia, 167 packages; cassia buds, 12 packages; nutmegs, 20 packages; mace, 9 packages; cloves, 604 packages; sago, 785 tons; sago flour, 86 tons; cochineal, 490 bags; logwood, 1,998 packages; saltpetre, 666 tons; jute, 1,150 tons; India cotton, 17,764 bales; cardamoms, 15 packages; cutch, 68 tons; castor oil, 427 casks; safflower, 167 bales; senna, 67 bales; shellac, 63 packages; gambier, 611 tons; and tallow, 2,260 casks.

At Hay's wharf, which was partially destroyed, it is known that 16,000 bags of Mauritius sugar were lying.

The loss of the large quantity of goods by the fire at Cotton's wharf had not much effect upon the markets in Mincing Lane yesterday. Sugar, however, has advanced considerably, and holders will not sell unless at a rise of about 20 per cent. on former quotations.

THE CROPS AND HARVEST PROSPECTS.

The necessity for distracting all accounts of injury to crops in their early stages has again been exemplified by the present prospects of the French vintage. In March and April last it was announced that in all the principal districts injury from the frost had been sustained which left no possibility of recovery, and we are now assured that in all parts of France the vineyards, with some very few exceptions, present the most favorable appearance. Indeed it is said that "for the last ten years they have not looked finer."

The grain harvest in many parts of Europe this year seems likely to be a fortnight or a month earlier than the average. In the south of France the cutting of wheat has already commenced. The accounts from America are also good, and the merchants are hurrying forward their last year's stocks to England at a rate which is limited only by the capacities of the railways and the freight market.

A woman named Molyneaux, of Brooklyn, fell down a flight of stairs, on Sunday evening last, and was instantaneously killed.

WHY SEND TROOPS TO CANADA?

Why, then, send troops to Canada? A numerous, hardy, and contented people, possessing within themselves all the resources and means of organization suitable for self-defence, have as little to apprehend from without as from within.

From the neighbouring Republic it is almost physically possible that any danger of molestation should arise; but, morally, it seems next to impossible that any idea of aggression should be entertained, under existing circumstances, by the United States. Without any disparagement to the vigor of the Government, or the valor of the people of the Union, we may be permitted to believe that their hands are as full just now as they could desire to have them, with the weighty task of regaining the seceded States to the Federal Commonwealth.—Waiving all considerations of international good faith and good fellowship, the idea of an American invasion of the Canadas amid a crisis of affairs in the Republic so critical as the present, appears to us, we own, utterly incredible.

If Americans really look forward to a day when they hope that the colonies north of the St. Lawrence will become portions of their expansive Federality, they are too wise not to perceive that this result is only likely to be brought about by the spontaneous action of the communities that now acknowledge the sovereignty of Queen Victoria. It is too late for conquest; we believe too late, likewise, for voluntary annexation, for the larger and richer a group of colonies like those of Australia or North America become, the more difficult it is to persuade local ambitions to forgo the pride of virtual independency, and the more difficult it is to persuade a people who are approaching the age of national maturity to renounce their separate name and separate life. As for annexation by force, the thing is simply absurd, and say one menace of the sort would justly create feelings of resentment and repulsion, calculated to embitter neighborly intercourse for many a future year. The lunatic guesconade of certain American journals about what might be done to annoy Great Britain in revenge for her observance of neutrality in the pending feud between North and South, is wholly unworthy of attention on the part of our Government. They ought not, to have learned by this time what all this means. It is simply so much superfluous yeast that every now and then bubbles over the bung-hole, and leaves behind what is intended for domestic use, all the clearer and sounder and less apt to turn sour: the process may not be pleasant to look at, or the result of it to touch; but why do we poke our political fingers into it? or order three or four regiments of the line to make ready, present, and not fire, because there is a bubbling for Buncombe? Why, in the sense of common sense, have three thousand men been sent to Canada, with all the suddenness befitting a political emergency, and with all the flourish of announcement that usually accompanies a military coup? For fighting purposes, these troops are too few; for political purposes, they are far too many. Twenty or thirty thousand men, if any, ought to have been sent, we can understand; three thousand defenders to a nation of twenty millions surpass, we own, our comprehension.

THE TRIP OF THE "GREAT EASTERN."

Father Point, July 8.—Calm; hazy on the river; no signs of the North Britan.

Quebec, July 8.—The Great Eastern is commanded by Capt. Kennedy, late of the Etna, quite a young man, apparently not more than 30 years of age. This is not his first trip in command of this magnificent vessel, but his first trip to the St. Lawrence. On taking command, Capt. K. resolved to handle her in the same way as an ordinary vessel. He reduced the number of officers one half, and brought her across without the slightest difficulty until the pilots Demers, Connell and Simard took her in charge. She swings freely with the tide, and there is ample room in her present berth for three vessels of her size to swing with ease and safety, thus affording another proof of the superiority of our harbor over any other into which the great ship has hitherto been. It was exactly eight days from the time the pilot was discharged at Liverpool till pilots were again taken on board at Pointe de Monte; and during all this time, there were but 20 hours of clear weather. Cape Race was made in six days from Liverpool, but it was too thick to communicate with the shore—fogs were continual; she nearly ran into the Arabia; would have done so had she had a bowsprit.

Two horses died from cold in passing an iceberg. There were two births on board during the passage. Several people did not know they had friends on board until the fourth or fifth day out! Impossible to have found the exact number except by taking census. A number of soldier's wives were found on board as stow-aways.

Abstract of log:—June 27th, 1 p. m., left Liverpool 28, distance run up to noon, 300 miles; 28th, do., 302; 30th, do., 318; July 1st do., 321; 2nd do., 340. At 4 a. m., passed Arabia, bound East latitude 50, North long. 41 W. Calm and dense fog. Throughout the day passed several icebergs; there was a dense fog all day. On the 4th, 6 p. m., sighted Cape Pine Light; 9 p.m., a dense fog, standing by the engines, owing to an enemy being in our track. Passed the American ship Liverp, eastbound bound in; also, ship Abyssinia. The distance run on the 5th was 320 miles, 6 p.m., St. Paul's Island abeam. Passed several vessels; 2.30 p.m., passed John Bull. On the 6th, arrived off Quebec 7 p. m. Throughout the voyage there was moderate weather, and smooth water but upon the 28th of the 5th.

Quebec, July 9.—Yesterday afternoon, the Mayor, Police Magistrate, City Councillors, &c., proceeded on board the Great Eastern to present an address from the Corporation. Captain Kennedy and the officers of the vessel warmly welcomed their visitors, and a suitable reply to the address was made, after which the company were invited to dinner. Captain Kennedy discharged the duties of host in a manner which was for him the esteem of the entire party.

The Great Eastern will be all this week discharging troops and cleaning up ship, and will, therefore not be ready to receive the public until about this day week-night. As soon as the time is definitely settled, the information will be telegraphed to the Agents of the Grand Trunk Railway along the entire line, so that excursion trains may commence running at once. Until all these necessary preparations are completed, the public will not be admitted on any terms. The charge for admission will probably be 50 cents per head. The 60th Rifles were landed from on board the Great Eastern last evening in two detachments—the first at 6, the second at 11 p. m. They were marched to the Jesuit Barracks, where they are quartered for the present.

At 2 o'clock on Tuesday a small boat containing three persons, was capsized off Quarantine, New York, and one of them was drowned.

MR. GEORGE BROWN.

At the declaration in Toronto, Mr. Brown after complimenting the Returning Officer, and his deputies, and expressing his satisfaction at the manner in which matters connected with the election had been conducted, then referred to his defeat and future course:—

"For the sake of my friends and for the sake of the cause with which I have been identified—I cannot but regret at my defeat; but so far as I am personally concerned, I may most sincerely that no one has such genuine cause of rejoicing at the result as I have. For some time past my health and my personal interests have rendered me desirous of retiring, at least for a term from Parliamentary life; and it was my desire not to have been a candidate at the present general election. But when the writs were issued, it was strongly pressed upon me to come forward for the city, and I was assured that my public retirement at the commencement of the contest would injuriously affect the success of my party throughout the country. On this consideration I consented to become a candidate, but I confess without that earnest desire to be returned that I have felt on former occasions. I have now faithfully discharged my duty to my party—my defeat has opened up the way for my retirement without dishonor—and I mean to take advantage of it. Of course no one can tell what changes may occur in the future, and what new obligations may hereafter arise—but it is my present resolution not to seek re-election by any constituency for some time to come. And let me say, that in forming this resolution, I have not lost sight of certain public advantages that may result from it. It has been by certain recreant politicians of Upper Canada a constant excuse offered in palliation of their misdeeds—"Oh, we know this or that act was wrong, but if we had done otherwise, "the Government would have been over-"thrown, and George Brown would have come in!" Well, George Brown will no longer be the scape-goat of these gentlemen—their miserable palliative will be no longer available, and we will have an opportunity of testing their sincerity in the past by their conduct in the future. (Cheers.) Another consideration has also been before me. When I went into Parliament in '51 it was with the fixed and avowed determination of carrying Representation by Population; but I found in the Assembly very few indeed with courage enough to commit themselves to a ten year's contest for it.—But I felt then, as I feel now, that that question formed the foundation of our political structure, and I have ever since strained every nerve for its accomplishment. In waging war on behalf of this great reform, I have been charged with dealing severely with the opponents of the measure. (Hear, hear.) Now, I readily admit, that in endeavouring to free Upper Canada from the injury and disgrace of French domination, I have used strong language against those representatives of Upper Canada who were traitors to their trusts, and that I have systematically held up all such men to public indignation; but I plead in justification that it was the only remedy for the evil.—(Loud cheers.) It is not by honied words that you put to shame a band of conspirators against the rights and honour of their country. I plead as justification, that however the contest of ten years has been waged, it has been brought to the very point of success. (Continued cheers.) I plead, as the complete and triumphant vindication of my policy, that whereas in 1852 it was well nigh impossible to find a seconder for a motion in favour of Representation by Population, there are now in 1861, 53 members elect from Upper Canada unreservedly committed to stand or fall by that vital measure. [Loud cheers.] Well, I am not beaten to the last, that some of these 53 gentlemen feel sore under the discipline by which they have been forced to commit themselves to a measure so distasteful to Monsieur Cartier. I am not blind to the fact that it will need every vote that can possibly be obtained to secure the success of a reformed Representation Bill in the present Parliament, and I cannot close my eyes to the possibility that a cordial union of all the Upper Canada members pledged to that measure, for the carrying of that measure, may be more easily accomplished if I am absent from the House and deprived of all credit from its final triumph. Had I been a member of the present Parliament my first object would have been to bring about such a union, and no personal sacrifice on my part would have been wanting to accomplish it.

THE "GREAT EASTERN" A SUCCESS.

The turning point in the affairs of this extraordinary vessel appears to have arrived—the darkest hour proceeds the dawn.—She is certain to realize money for her owners by the trip to Canada and back, on which she will shortly proceed, and the Government have been very liberal in their treatment with the company. The number of troops which will go out by the Great Eastern will be little short of 2,500, and there will also be horses and artillery. The payment per head is to be £5. 15s., so that this portion of her freight alone will realize £15,000. Of course this includes provisions for the soldiery, which will not cost the company, it is calculated, more than twenty shillings per head. The vessel is also permitted to carry first class passengers, the advertised charge for which is £20 per head. The homeward freight will consist of timber, wheat and flour, and it is already known that she will have a full cargo. The expenses of working this magnificent specimen of maritime skill are, no doubt, enormous, for it is said that her first trip to New York and back cost eleven thousand pounds but, in the present instance, she is certain to realize a handsome sum in excess of the outlay; and even the last voyage, unremunerative in a certain sense, fully established the character of the vessel as a first class conveyance. Mr. John Laird, of Birkenhead, has signed a contract for "the fitting up" of the ship to accommodate the troops, in which more than one hundred tons of timber will be absorbed. These are to be so constructed as to be readily moved and available for similar occasions. It is evident that the Government have it in contemplation to avail themselves of the services of the Great Eastern whenever the necessity arises, and this fact alone cannot fail to advance her value as a commercial speculation. The amount realized during the present week by the admission fees will probably exceed £3,000. — Liverpool Times.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

From Montreal Pilot, Friday evening.

At a quarter past nine o'clock yesterday evening a severe shock of an earthquake was felt in this city. It continued several seconds, and was accompanied by a loud, rumbling report. Much consternation was occasioned by it, there it caused windows and doors to shake violently, and, in some cases, the walls to vibrate, while the inmates were almost thrown from their feet. The motion, which was distinctly from the North and South.

Dr. Smallwood reads us the following:—"A smart shock of an earthquake was felt at the Observatory, Isle Jesus, last night [the 11th instant] at 9 hour 3 min. mean time; the wave passing from the West towards the East; the tremor lasted for about 20 seconds. The Second waves was distinct from the First waves. Barometer 29.624 inch. Thermometer 57.°5; Wind E. by S., calm; Sky covered with cumuli frontes clouds; considerable magnetic disturbance.

The shock of the earthquake was also distinctly felt in Montreal, and parts adjacent. In this also to be attributed to the Comet?

At Chambly we learn that it lasted for 11 seconds.

We believe that the earthquake was also felt at Toronto. The vibration seemed to come from the East to the West. The time was about 9 o'clock. In one instance the room in which a person was sitting was felt to rock slightly to and fro, while small articles on a bureau were shaken and rattled audibly.

The Examiner.

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1861.

THE RESULT.

It will not be news to most of our readers now to hear that Col. Haultain has been elected, for that fact, we suppose, has reached the most remote part of the County ere this time. No words can be found more expressive than to say it was a GREAT VICTORY! Great for the cause of Reform, great for its moral influence, great for its triumph over faction, and GREAT in every sense of the word. Following is a state of the polling:—

	Haultain.	Congr.
Peterboro	222	255
Ashburnham	45	67
Monaghan	27	27
Smith	268	102
Douro	48	220
Otonabee	283	119
Ennismore	8	123
Belmont	49	18
Dummer	123	41
Asphodel	122	184
Back Township	32	106
	1292	1262

Majority for Haultain....30.

The Declaration.

Excepting the occasion of the Prince of Wales' visit no larger gathering ever took place in Peterborough. Certain it is that on no similar occasion has ever the same interest been manifested over a political victory in this County. A procession of carriages of about half a mile in length, and preceded by the same Band, accompanied Col. Haultain to the place of Declaration. The number present could not have been less than 1,500 persons, and it was pleasing to see the fair sex so well represented.—The Returning Officer, James Hall, Esq., Sheriff, proceeded to read the returns, which showed Col. Haultain to be elected by a majority of 30, and therefore declared that gentleman duly elected to serve as our representative in the next Parliament.—The announcement was received with the most hearty cheers, amid which Col. Haultain came forward and briefly thanked his supporters for their noble exertions in securing his election. They had fulfilled their promises to him, and he would endeavor to act out his pledges to them. To his opponents he would say that he entertained not the slightest animosity towards them. No doubt they thought he was a bad bargain; he would endeavour to make the best of that bargain, and now that the election was over, and he stood in the honored position as their Representative in Parliament, he would act not for a section, but for the whole; and he earnestly wished the advice, counsels and prayers of his constituents, that he might be strengthened in the discharge of his responsible duties

Mr. Conger then came forward and said he thanked the gentlemen who gave him so generous a support at the late contest. Though he stood before the electors as the defeated candidate, he maintained that had not the Sheriff virtually disfranchised over 100 voters in the back townships, he would have been elected in place of Col. Haultain. Though defeated in this County, it was a pleasure to him to see the great defeats George Brown and his party had sustained throughout the country. The election had resulted in the utter rout of the "lookers to Washington." [Here Mr. Conger's voice was drowned for several minutes by hisses, groans, and cries of "Shame, shame."] Some people might differ from him but he couldn't help that. [Renewed groans.] To the misconduct of that gentleman [pointing to the Sheriff] he owed his defeat, and he was much mistaken if Mr. Hall would not yet be made to pay the penalty of his illegal interference, and he would sincerely now think it was the intention of himself and his friends to protect the election on that ground.

Col. Haultain again addressed the electors. Allusion had been made by Mr. Conger to the conduct of the Sheriff in the election, it having been charged against him that the Roll of 1860 had been used contrary to law. It was easy to understand Mr Conger's mortified feelings, but how he should seek revenge on the Sheriff, was not so plain. He held in his hands documents which he thought would prove to any one that the Sheriff had acted fairly and impartially, and that in having the vote in the Back Townships taken on the 1860 roll was only following the best legal advice he could obtain; in proof of which he would read a telegram from Mr. Harrison, of Toronto, the best legal advisor in Canada, through his agent Mr. S. Fleming:

(Copy.)
Toronto, June 26, 1861.

To Sheriff Hall, Peterboro':

Harrison says "was only the lists that were published in all respects before the writ issued."

S. FLEMING.

To place it beyond doubt Mr. Hall telegraphed to Sheriff Corbett of Kingston, as follows:

(Copy.)
Peterboro', 20th June, 1861.

To Mr. Sheriff Corbett, Kingston:

If lists for 1861 were not fyled when writ was issued can I use them? Which do you use?

James Hall.

To which the following reply was received:

(Copy.)
Kingston, June 27, 1861.

To James Hall,

I use last year's list if all of this year's were not fyled before the issuing of the writ. Take such as were and use last year's for such as were not. This is the Attorney General's opinion.

T. A. CORBETT.

In the face of this can any person accuse the Sheriff of partiality? No! and he could not conceive how any fairly-disposed person could for a moment entertain such an idea. (Cheers)

Three cheers were then given for the Queen, three for Col. Haultain, and three for the Returning Officer.

The Band played the National Anthem after which the procession re-formed and moved by Water to Hunter street, and thence to Ashburnham, and back again, thence to the North ward, thence down George to Simcoe Street, and up to the residence of Colonel Haultain, where after three cheers more were given for our member elect, the procession separated.

SIGNIFICANT.

A Toronto politician, yelept O'Donohoe wandered into North Wellington during the late election for the purpose of addressing the Catholic electors in Arthur, and to induce them to vote for a certain candidate there named Ross. The unfortunate man received grouns in place of cheers. Afterwards a large and influential meeting of the Roman Catholic electors passed the following resolution:—

"Moved by Mr. James Stevenson, seconded by Cornelius O'Callaghan, Jr., That the free and independent (!) Catholic electors of the North Riding of Wellington consider it a presumption in any man from Toronto or elsewhere but of the Riding to dictate to them the course they should pursue in the coming election and that they have full confidence in Dr. Clarke to represent us in Parliament. And, moreover, that he, Dr. Clarke is the man pointed out by the Hierarchy of Canada for them, the Catholics, to support."

In like manner there is every reason to suppose that Mr. Conger was the man pointed out by the same Hierarchy for the free and independent Catholic electors—Heaven save the mark—of this county to support. Although not a particle about Separate Schools appeared in either candidates address, or was alluded to at the hustings, yet the Catholics almost to a man supported Mr. Conger, while it was known that he when in Parliament voted against Separate Schools. Surely there must have been some pledges or undertakings to lead to so general a support as that received by Mr. Conger in the late political struggle. The Ministry will not have to crow over Peterborough as it does over some other Counties that have been what they are pleased to call "redeemed." Despite the united influence of the Grand Trunk, the Ministry, and its local adherents, and the "Hierarchy of Canada," an Opposition candidate has been elected here. May the electors generally note the significant fact.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, July 15th, 1861.

Council met,—His Worship the Mayor presiding.

Present—Messrs. Toole, Kennedy, McDonald, Ormond, Bradfield, Eastland, Maloney, Chamberlen, Menzies and Stevenson

The Mayor read the vote recorded on the Rail Road proposal, forty-five was the majority against it.

His Worship informed the Council that in obedience to instructions he had proceeded to Toronto, but had failed in seeing Mr. Cameron as he was in Post electioneering, and that if he had seen him it would probably be useless, in the then state of political excitement.

He also read a note from Messrs. Rose & Davis, Solicitors, Toronto, informing them that they had valued on him for the amount of their costs $126 52c in the case of the Town vs. Conger. He had accepted the draft, and it would be due to-morrow.

He also read a communication from the Crown Lands Department acquainting the Council that the order had passed for the land at the south end of the Town to be made out to them on certain conditions.

A petition from P. J. Ayres in reference to his wooden building on George street, was read and referred to a special committee.

A petition from several parties licensed to sell spirituous liquors, asking the Council to refund the money to them which they had paid for their licenses, was read.

Accounts from P. J. Ayres, S. J. Carver, Thos. Hutchinson, and J. Thomson, were read and referred to Finance Committee.

An account from Geo. Bell, for assisting the Clerk in making out the Assessment Roll, was after some discussion referred to the Finance Committee on the following division:

Yeas.—Messrs. Kennedy, Bradfield, Maloney, Chamberlen and Stevenson.

Nays.—Messrs. Toole, McDonald, Ormond, Eastland and Menzies.

The Mayor voted yea and the motion passed.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Menzies,—That the communication from the Crown Lands Department be received, and the Mayor is hereby directed to take the necessary steps to have the necessary requirements therein complied with at the earliest possible moment.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Ormond,—That the Treasurer be instructed to pay to the Special Constables a portion of their wages now and the balance as soon as convenient, and that the Mayor be instructed to dismiss said constables if in his opinion their services can be dispensed with.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. McDonald,—That the Mayor be instructed to collect all fines that have been levied in the Police Court since the commencement of this year and that are yet unpaid, with a view of liquidating the expenses of said Court.—Carried.

The Council adjourned for one week.

MEMBERS RETURNED.

Below we classify the members returned for Upper Canada. M. Ministerialist. O. Oppositionist. Ind. Independent. It will be seen that after giving the Ministry the "doubtful" members, the Opposition have a majority of 5 in Upper Canada. The "independent" members are pledged against the Ministry, so that on a vote of confidence motion Upper Canada should give a majority of 7 against the Ministry:—

FIRE.

The workshop of Mr. George Tanner, Cabinet Maker, Hunter Street, together with the working machinery, &c., was destroyed by fire on Thursday night last. Mr. Tanner estimates his loss at $1,200; insured for $600. The origin of the fire is not known but there is strong presumptive evidence that the building was not fire to. The wind was blowing from the northwest at the time, and had not everything around been thoroughly saturated with the rain that had been falling all day, the block of buildings in the neighborhood of Mr. Tanner's would have gone. As usual, the alarm bell was not disturbed much, and only for the glare of the flames and the shouts of characters, few of our inhabitants would have known there was a fire at all, although it occurred as early as 10½ o'clock. We wanted not forget to state that the engine was brought into play, and from the proximity of the Creek, good service was done in checking the spread of the flames.

☞ We understand that on Wednesday, 10th instant, a man slipped from a stick of timber, on which he was floating, into the water, near Rogers' dam, and was carried under a timber "jam" by the current and drowned. The body was recovered on still draining of Grammar was somewhat wanted here as in other places. This deficiency, it is understood, will be supplied in another year, so that an education may be obtained in Peterboro' not inferior to any thing of the kind in any other provincial town, and so that the youth of our town and county shall not need to be sent elsewhere for that which can be so much better supplied at home.

The Departments of the Common School are well and carefully taught, the teachers, generally speaking, being well adapted to their several spheres of duty, and working harmoniously to a common result, under the superintendence of Mr. Dunn, the Principal. The kind, homely feeling that pervades the Juvenile Department, under Miss Dundas and Miss Kennedy; the tasteful and pleasant manner in which Mrs. Heathfield's class is conducted; the accurate and methodical teaching of Mr. Peters; the careful and pains-taking training of Miss Clark's class; and the correct business-like working of Mr. Blaicher's, gave general satisfaction to all the visitors present; while the singing and decoration added pleasure to interest. The Prizes were not awarded till the evening, when Dr. Burnham, as Chairman of the Trustees, with a few appropriate remarks, bestowed Forty-three Volumes on those who had wrought most perseveringly for them; while, from the fewness of the Prizes, a large number, scarcely less deserving, were reluctantly passed over.

After a few words from the Local Superintendent, in commendation of the appearance made during the Examination by both Teachers and Pupils, and urging to patient and hopeful perseverance, not in study alone, but in the after duties of life, as well, the School adjourned for the holidays,—to meet again, with renewed health, and resolution, on Monday six weeks.

It is for the parents and other friends of the School, to consider how far they are willing to see these endeavours and these hopes realized by a faithful and persevering encouragement of them, by their active and zealous co-operation, without which their children can neither be properly educated now, nor benefitted permanently afterwards.

I remain, Mr. Editor,
Yours, very truly,
Peterboro', C. W.

LATEST from EUROPE,

ARRIVAL OF THE "HIBERNIAN."

FATHER POINT, July 15.

The Hibernian reached Father Point at 9 o'clock this evening. She brings 46 cabin and 122 steerage passengers. She saw numerous icebergs, and was detained 24 hours in a fog. She met the Nova Scotian at midnight on Sunday, 30 miles east of Anticosti.

LONDONDERRY DESPATCH.

Mr. Lever, M P., has published a pamphlet entitled "Austria—her Position and Prospects." His object is to advocate the establishment of a line of steamers from Southampton to Trieste, under an Austrian guarantee.

Yesterday the American citizens in London celebrated the anniversary of their country's independence by a breakfast. Dr. Patton, of New York, who presided, offered up a prayer for the extermination of slavery, and a sympathetic letter was read from the American Minister, Mr. Adams.

The Post's correspondence at Rome says the Pope had recovered sufficiently from his indisposition to celebrate last Saturday the Pontifical Mass in St. Peter's, a long and fatigued service, in honor of that apostle, the patron of Rome.

The Committee of the Memorial Fund on behalf of Mr. Braidwood's family, was held at the Mansion House, yesterday.—The Lord Mayor presided.

The Italian Government has granted a subsidy to an English Company, which has undertaken to carry out a complete system of postal and passenger service on the Mediterranean; the Company to be allowed to erect wharves, thus avoiding for the first time on the Mediterranean the use of small boats for landing goods and passengers, but passengers are to be exempt from passport regulations.

The Daily News denounces the Bulgarian letters, which have appeared in one of its contemporaries, as an offence against good taste and a calumnious caricature of English social and domestic life.

The Birkenhead Friday mail train arrived here this morning, at 9 o'clock. At a short distance from Rugby, while proceeding at the rate of about 30 miles per hour, the boiler suddenly blew up, forcing all the carriages off the rails and down an embankment. Several passengers were severely shaken and injured. The post-office van was smashed to atoms. The stoker had both legs blown off, and his life is despaired of.

The Times' city article of Thursday evening says:—There were numerous investments yesterday on part of the public, and for the first time for several weeks consols exhibited and sustained symptoms of animation. The 4th of the month was passed off without pressure, and the demand was moderate both on the bank of England and in the discount market. About £9,000 in bar gold was bought by the Bank yesterday, while 50,000 sovereigns were withdrawn for the American Railway. Market depressed the whole day.

London Corn Exchange, July 5.—Weather showery. Arrivals pretty liberal. A better tone of trade, but nothing dearer than on Monday last.

ARRIVAL OF THE "SAXONIA."

NEW YORK, July 15.

The great fire in London was still burning.

The new Indian loan of £6,000,000 has been introduced.

FRANCE.

The Patrie denies that Thouvenel had received a deputation from Rome.

The Patterson family case had been decided. The appeal was dismissed, and the first judgement confirmed.

SPAIN.

Spain abandons her claims against Morocco—declares Tetuan the property of Spain. She will render it impregnable, and colonize the territory.

Three hundred Republicans had arisen in insurrection in Lorca.

ITALY.

The Turin Chamber of Deputies had voted the Budget for 1861.

Two Bourbon committees had been discovered at Naples, and 300 members seized.

A plot to assassinate Garibaldi had been discovered.

The Government had taken measures to watch the entry to Capreva.

On the discussion of the Loan Bill in the Turin Chamber, Count Madiano said he had no confidence in a Ministry that maintained a French alliance. England was the only true friend of Italy, and insisted on the immediate evacuation of Rome by the French.

France supported the French alliance, the foundation and shield of popular right of all Europe.

Cialdini had been made Commander of the Southern army.

The Patrie says that disturbances had taken place in Southern Italy.

AUSTRIA.

Austria had definitely resolved in a Cabinet Council not to accept the Hungarian address.

A Royal rescript had been sent to the Hungarian Diet, in which the address was stigmatized as disloyal to the rights of the Crown. The Diet was requested to alter the former contents of the address. The Diet will be dissolved if it refuses.

TURKEY.

An English frigate had anchored at Constantinople, after obtaining from the Porte a firman, required by the Convention relative to the Straits of Dardanelles.

The Sultan had introduced great reforms in the Imperial household. Five hundred servants had been dismissed, and the civil list had been reduced from 75,000,000 to 12,000,000.

COMMERCIAL.

The rate of exchange was falling. Consols heavy; 89¼ a 89¾ for money; 89¾ a 89⅞ for account.

Foreign exchange tends upwards, in consequence of a resolution of the Bank of France to pay notes in silver, as the stock of gold was very low.

The Liverpool breadstuffs market was steady.

The weather has been favourable for the crops.

Wakefield, Nash & Co. report flour steady, with fair demand at 24s 6d a 28s. Wheat steady and prime qualities a shade dearer, and quoted red at 9s 6d a 12s; white 10s 5d a 13s 6d. Corn steady, with rather more doing; yellow, 28s a 28s 6d; white 31s a 31s 6d.

"HARD TIMES" IN NEW YORK.

Notwithstanding the large number who have enlisted in the service of the Government, there is still an alarming force of idle men among the working classes of New York. Their condition is already beginning to attract the attention of the authorities, and a meeting was held on Friday last, in the Chamber of the Board of Councilmen, consisting of three members from each branch of the Common Council, and a number of prominent citizens. A report of proceedings is published in the New York papers of Saturday. Alderman Dayton addressed the meeting, and although we have seen no calculation of the actual number of idle men in the city, the following remarks by Ald. D. indicate a serious state of affairs:—

He said every citizen of New York must perceive, that there was a great amount of actual suffering among the working classes of our population, and many who had heretofore been employed in mechanical pursuits, are now without labor, and of course without the means of support. It was obvious that something must be done to give work to those who are willing to labor, and to provide for the families of volunteers.—The fact that a great many of our people have enlisted, has not diminished the demand for labor, and a great many are left among us to be supported. The number left is almost without any perceptible diminution.

The Corporation of the City of New York, having determined on reducing expenses, has comparatively little encouragement to offer; but some hopes are held out that Congress might be induced to fortify New York Harbour, and thereby employ a great number of labourers. Mr Tappan, the President of the Croton Board, submitted a statement showing that from 500 to 1000 men might be employed in that department. After further discussion, the meeting adjourned until Wednesday. The press of New York has been singularly silent on the state of affairs in that city since the commencement of hostilities between the North and the South, but the distress has now reached a degree that has compelled the authorities to organize for the purpose of efficient and immediate relief.

ST. DOMINGO.

A most unsettled and threatening state of things exists in St. Domingo. The native population have taken up arms against the Spaniards in several of the country districts, and are determined to fight for their independence. Meanwhile disease has broken out among the Spanish soldiers; several of them had died, and there was a large number in hospital. The greatest consternation, it is said, prevails among the people of the city of St. Domingo. The Spaniards in vain endeavor to entertain the inhabitants with military music and fireworks. Save the new-comers, scarcely any one is to be seen abroad, and a thick gloom overspreads the community. The military are carrying themselves most haughtily and offensively towards the black and colored people; and Santana and his accomplices are in the greatest alarm at the fruits which are already resulting from their treachery. The department of Ciboa is in complete insurrection. The Spanish officers and soldiers boast that it is the intention of their Government to possess itself of the whole island of Hayti.—Letter from Hayti.

The Buffalo Courier says that during the exhibition of Fire Works on the evening of the Fourth, a man from Toronto, whose name it did not learn, climbed the Liberty Pole, and then the iron rod which upholds the Eagle, and then sat complacently for some minutes astride of that patriotic fowl. He descended to the top of the pole proper, where he performed divers evolutions, such as hanging by the heels, making himself revolve about the rod, standing on one foot, hanging by one arm, &c. His daring and fool-hardy feats made every one's blood run cold. The Courier expresses its delight that the man reached terra firma safely; but doesn't think it exactly the civil thing for a Canadian to go over to that country and ride the American Eagle.

....."Go to grass!" said a mother to her daughter. "Well, then, I'spose I'll have to marry," ejaculated the fair damsel. "Why so?" inquired the astonished mother. "Because all men are grass." The old lady survived.

Strumous or Scrofulous affections are the curse, the blight, the potato-rot of mankind. They are vile and filthy as well as fatal. They arise from contamination and impurity of the blood, and are to be seen around us everywhere. One quarter of all we meet are tainted with them, and one quarter of these die of them: die foolishly, too, for they are curable. Ayers' Sarsaparilla cleanses out the Scrofulous corruption from the blood, renders it more pure and healthy, and effectually expurges the foul contamination from the system. No longer groan under your Scrofulous disorders, since the irresistable Ayer has provided his masterly combination of curative virtues that he calls Sarsaparilla.—Democrat, Waterbury, Ct.

MAN MISSING.

JOHN ABRAM, left Wm. Morcock's Axe Factory, in Peterboro', where he was employed, on Tuesday, 29th May last, since which time nothing has been heard from him. As it is supposed he was suffering from mental derangement at the time fears are entertained for his safety. He is an Irishman by birth, about 38 years of age, about 5 feet 7 inches in height, and when he left a small under chin brown whisker; his hair is black. He wore when he left a black coat, black satin vest, speckled tweed pants and black cloth cap.
Any information respecting him will be thankfully received by his brother, THOMAS ABRAM, care of Mr. Wm. Morcock, Box 17, P. O., Peterboro', C. W.
Papers copying the above will confer a great favor on the friends of the missing man.

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL
Map of Upper Canada,
TOGETHER WITH A
DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY
OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF
N'H & S'H MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONKLIN, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, shewing on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority: also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the boundaries and name of each County and Township, the great Lakes, Rivers and principal Mill Streams. Tables showing the Number of Town Reserves, each County Seat in Upper Canada from the Magnetic Observatory, Toronto, the Population of each City, Town, County and Township will also be given, with other important and useful information, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be Illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province, executed in the best style of the art.
There will also be given on the above Map an enlarged Plan in the most concise detail, of the above Townships, shewing concessions, lots, and sub-divisions, with the names of the proprietors neatly engraved thereon; also, Highland Reserves, Churches, Schools, Public Buildings, Mills, Blacksmiths shops, Stores, Inns, &c., together with numerous good gravel, plank and other Roads open to travel, the true course of Rivers and mill streams; also, enlarged Plans of Towns and Villages in the Township.
The names of all Subscribers residing outside of Towns, will be engraved specially prominent on the Map for the purpose of showing the position of their residence beforehand; also, the names of Subscribers in the Towns and Villages will be published, with the title, profession, business, &c. of each, thus constituting a complete Rural, Professional, and Mercantile Business Directory.
The publishers being practical engravers, draftsmen, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 48 by 72 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvass, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4 50) payable on delivery.
Other Townships in the County will be canvassed in due time.

HAY-MAKING.

Although the spring has not been the best but could be desired for planting, or the germination of the spring grains, and has proved quite destructive to our fruit and fruit trees, it has lately been quite favorable for winter wheat, and we notice many fields that in May appeared hardly worth saving, are now giving promise of a tolerable crop. The grass and clover are also looking exceedingly well, as far as we have observed, and what we can learn, with fine weather for curing, the hay crop of the country will be exceedingly large. This is our first summer crop, as well as a very important one, and with this well saved, we have made a very good beginning.

It is important that everything should be out of the way before hay-ng commences, as this absorbs the entire attention for a time, and it is very unpleasant while hard at work securing the hay, to have the feelings ever present that something neglected, some crop suffering. It depresses the spirits, and unless a man has the patience of Job, makes him a little irritable. So get everything out of the way, and be sure that all implements required in the work are in the very best condition. The almost universal complaint among farmers during haying and harvest is scarcity of laborers, and this will be more serious the present year than ever before. A little forethought and calculation is absolutely necessary, on this point.

The condition at which grass should be cut to make the best and most nutritious hay is a very important question, and one which has received a good deal of attention from the agricultural press, chemists, and practical farmers. The great object sought is the preservation of the grass in its most perfect state,—in that stage in which it contains the most nutriment,—and with as little change as possible. Just when this time arrives is a matter of some dispute, and it varies no doubt in the different varieties of grass. As a general rule, perhaps, the best time to cut grass is when in full flower and there are some who will say to this rule there is no exception. Others contend as confidently that Timothy should be cut when the seed is well formed and about ripe enough to germinate. John Johnston, of Geneva, once, after discussing the question with a neighbor, agreed to leave the subject to a flock of lambs, and they soon decided it by eating up clean that which was cut in flower, while of that cut later a great part was left.

At the West it is found that if Timothy is cut in flower the roots are injured and the meadow about destroyed. This fact caused Prof. Kirtland, of Ohio, to make the subject one of careful examination, and he found the best time to cut to be when the stalk becomes dry at a point above the first or second joint of the stem. If cut earlier than this, the roots send up new stalks and thereby become weakened and die out during the winter. Of course the effect upon the future must be considered; but for making a sweet, fragrant, nutricious hay, it strikes us, that season of full flower, or just when the bloom is dropping from the earliest heads, is the happy moment.

The process of curing should, if possible, the effect*s in the* cock. Hay thus made contains more of the juices, and much more of the color of the grass, than when spread out thinly, exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, which is rather burnt than cured.—The chief point after cutting is to preserve from the rain and dew, as these sadly deteriorate the quality of hay. In very bad weather it is almost impossible to make good hay, but a good many contrive to make a passable hay. If y-ops are coming each year into more general use, particularly at the East, and so far as we can learn, with the most satisfactory results. Last season a large grass-sower informed us he should no sooner try to make hay without caps than live in a house without a roof. The hay crop is one of the most important that farmers raise, and every means should be taken not only to secure it in the best condition, but to add to its bulk. This crop keeps starvation from the barns and cattle-yards, and such exertions should be put forth as shall prevent waste either by unpropitious weather or the carelessness of those engaged in making and gathering.

A NEW METHOD OF PRESERVING GRAIN.

A joint-stock company has been formed in Paris for the preservation of wheat and other descriptions of grain, under the direction of M. Dayere, a professor at the school of Arts and Manufactures. The system of preserving corn is founded on the principle, that it is the excess of water contained in the wheat which is the principal cause of the fermentation and of the production of insects which destroy grain. Consequently, by placing in pits wheat sufficiently dry—that is, containing less than 16 per cent of water—one is certain to preserve it without any loss of weight or alteration of the quality. The War Department, which feeds 500,000 men, and which according to the existing regulations, must always have a large quantity of corn on hand, has studied M. Dayere's system since the year 1856, both in France and Algeria, under the direct on of commissioners appointed specially on account of their knowledge of the subject. The results obtained are highly satisfactory. 576 quintals of wheat were divided into two portions, and one of them placed in the pits at Amieres, near Paris, on the 30th of April, 1856, and the other on the 22nd of May of the same year. The corn remained there for 25 months without being stirred. The specific weight of the first portion on being placed in the pits was 76 kilogrammes 60 the hectolitre, and when withdrawn it was 76 kilogrammes 36. The second portion weighed 78 kilogrammes 90 the hectolitre on being deposited in the pits and 78 77 when removed. The quantity was 576 quintals when deposited in the pits, and 575 quintals 93 when withdrawn, showing an insignificant loss of only 7 kilogrammes. When the wheat was withdrawn it was not only in as good condition as when deposited, but the colour was better.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who had tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an imparti.l trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness and their regular use for a few days will, atall times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the
"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"
have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits d rived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x38 inches, entitled,
"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"
2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,
"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"
3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to
The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"
is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder, postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains the Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those who subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

Poisonous Minerals and Drugs.

MOTHERS TAKE HEED!

Do you when observing the uneasy actions of your children, consider that it may be more than a mere Choic that affects them? Is nine cases out of ten, the cause of the little sufferer's anguish is WORMS, and should be at once healed to.

HEADS OF FAMILIES

Do not let your children suffer, when we present you with

JUDSON'S WORM TEA
A SAFE AND PLEASANT CURE FOR WORMS

Buy much better and safer would it be to have it always in the house. A little delay when a child is taken ill may often be the cause of its death, while acting without delay, and by giving the MOUNTAIN HERB TEA home distinctly, you will not only save the child a long and tedious illness, and yourself much expense, but also feel happier in knowing that you have done your duty, and perchance saved its life.

This medicine is combined purely of

HERBS AND ROOTS
NOT A PARTICLE OF
Calomel or Mineral
IS USED IN IT.

No more Bitby Tormentors will be used by those who once use this Tea. The only active principle of all other Vermifuges and Worm Killers is MERCURY.

JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

ANDYS, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecse, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food properly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and the circulation is feeble. The lungs become charged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some poison, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstructions is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the constituents of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. The Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sound, thereby and consequently the vital organs.

Plainest indeed, will it be to you, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the affected parts, purify the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints, Debility, Inward Weakness,
Coughs, Poor and Ague, Liver Complaints,
Colds, Female Complaints, Lassitude of Spirits,
Chills, Diseases Jaundice, Pills,
Costiveness, Indigestion, Sores and Ulcers,
Dyspepsia, Inflammation, Secondary Symptoms,
Diarrhœa, &c. &c. &c.
Dropsy.

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove all impurities of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tarascan Indians, in the Mountains of Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Cacique" and Discovery of the Aztecs.

OBSERVE.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Round Wrapper, Red Seal on the side, and Signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

All genuine have the signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERYSIPELAS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ST. VITUS'S DANCE, OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions it not assisted to do this through the natural channels of health, by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with the pabulum of life diseased, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is inevitably deranged.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the root alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of those have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall restore the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is recommended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors, Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their assent to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no other. The sick want the best and there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferrable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if those guides are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and never bring about what is required. SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or troubles, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel; or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague, Inflammation,
Asthma, Jaundice
Bilious Complaints, Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin, Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints, Piles,
Colics, Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels, Retention of Urine,
Consumption, Scrofula, or King's-Evil
Debility, Sore Throats,
Dropsy, Stone and Gravel,
Dysentery, Secondary Symptoms,

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

LINES
ON THE ELECTION CONTEST.

He has fought beneath the British Flag,—
The gem of Freedom's cause—
And forced the tyrants to succumb,
That spurned British laws;
He has stood where cannons thunder'd,
And the rifle bullets hiss,
But he never gained a victory
Or triumph such as this.

He may have led the gallant men,
In battle fields of old,
Or conquered powerful armies,
Both skilful, fierce and bold.
These enemies were only myths,
Mere nothings to our view,
Compared with raging Congerites,
That strove him to subdue.

Their ministerial aide-camps
Were flying to and fro,
To muster up their broken ranks,
And crush their Haultain foe.
Each charge proved unavailing—
How they waver,—how the yield,—
The Haultain soldiers, firm and bold,
Soon drove them from the field.

Cheer up, defeated Congerites,
Why would you weep in vain?
Your gallant Chief is still with you,
And likely to remain.
O, don't arise in frantic rage,
If I should tell to thee,
You placed that little silly man
Just where he ought to be.

Forsooth! a glorious victory,
O'er Conger's powerful host,—
In spite of Ministerial aid,
The contest they have lost.
In Haultain, truth and honesty,—
Integrity combined;
Before him, trickery and falsehood
Must ramble like the wind.

Alast their boastings or the bribes,
Or bullying at the poll,
Their golden promises or threats
United can't control.
Since Haultain's free electors
Did for him the victory gain.
And placed him on the watch-tower,
Their freedom to maintain.

Rejoice, his loyal supporters,
Since he has gained the day;
He will spear the Cartier cod-fish,
From out the Gaspe Bay.
The Haultain air is rather hot—
Watch how they pant for breath,
With open mouth and quivering fin,
Symbolical of death.

He has vanquished his opponent,—
May he succeed again,
And free us from McDonald's yoke,
And Cartier's galling chain.
And let them know that Haultainites
Are men instead of fish!
That equal justice, equal rights,
Is our demand and wish.

O, may he prove a safety-valve,
Against each reckless grant,
And check those hungry hangers-on,
Refusing what they want.
And guard our dearest interests all
With unremitting zeal;
Till I lend or foe confess his worth,
And his true value feel.

Come, three cheers for Col. Haultain,
As he grasps the sword of power;
May our sympathies be with him
In every trying hour,
When he takes his seat in Parliament,
With the laurels he has gained—
Returning, wear those trophies bright,
Untarnished or unstained.

Matrimonial Infelicities

BY AN IRRITABLE MAN.

After Midnight.

"Do you hear that child cough, my dear?" I asked the mother of my children, as I raised myself on one elbow in bed and listened.

"No," she said, awakening from her sleep. "I do not."

"Then you must be deaf," I cried.—"Hark!"

The interesting woman lifted her head from the pillow, untied the strings of her bonnet de nuit, brushed back a lock of hair from her right ear, and listened attentively.

"There," said I, as a harsh, discordant sound broke the stillness, "do you hear it now?"

"I hear a singular noise, she replied, "but it is not a cough."

"Then I should like to know what it is," I exclaimed.

"I am sure I cannot tell," she replied, "but it isn't a cough, and that is very certain."

"I am not quite so certain, however," I said.

"I can't help it," she answered; "I am a mother, and am presumed to know the sound of a child's cough when I hear one."

"Well," I said, "I am a father, and I don't see why I can't tell a cough when I hear it. Listen."

"My dear," said my wife, grasping my arm nervously as she spoke, "it proceeds from some one trying to get into the house. That noise comes from a file."

"Nonsense," I replied; "burglars wouldn't think of breaking in here."

"Hark!" she cried; "I hear some one on the stairs."

We both sat up in bed, with our eyes fixed on the door. Again was heard the hard harsh noise that first aroused me. There was no mistaking the sound this time, and my wife said:

"It is the little boy; he was out too much to-day, and though I tried hard, to do so, I couldn't keep him in."

The door opened at this moment, and Katy entered.

"Oh, ma'am the little boy coughs so, and I don't know what to give him. I think he has the croup, ma'am."

"Go back to the nursery immediately," my wife said, "and I will be there in a minute."

My wife rose, went to the closet, selected the proper remedies, and opened the door to depart.

"Well," she asked, turning to me, "are you not going with me?"

"What good can I do?" I inquired, "I don't see why I should get up in the middle of the night, and go trotting around the house because you do. If I could be of any possible service to you, I would go of course."

"Well, it would look fatherly in you to do it," she answered. "Will you go?"

"My dear," I said, "if there be one thing I dislike more than another, it is to get up in the middle of the night. I'll go if it be necessary, but don't you wait for me, for it will take me some time to dress, and besides the little fellow needs you there at once."

My wife departed.

I lay down, deciding to remain where I was, rather than go where I knew I should be in the way. Ten minutes passed, during which time the little boy coughed occasionally, but each time it was looser and more natural. Then, satisfied that he was improving under his mother's treatment, I resolved to go to sleep. Scarcely were my eyes closed, when Katy tapped at the door.

"Come in," I cried.

"The mistress would like to have you come up to the nursery now to see the little boy."

"How is he?" I asked. "Is he awake or asleep?"

"Oh, he is just sleeping nicely, and he looks so purty, the mistress thought you'd like to see him."

"Not to-night, Katy. Tell your mistress I'll see him in the morning."

Then I turned over and closed my eyes again. I had gone a little distance into the land of Nod, when my wife touched me on the shoulder.

"You are a humane, affectionate father, ain't you?" regarding me with a severe look.

"I don't know anything to the contrary," I replied. "Do you?"

"Yes, I do," she answered. "As I I must say I think your conduct to-night was atrocious. Not only did you let me go alone to the nursery, but when I sent for you to come and see the little boy, who, for aught you knew, was dying, you refused. You men are just as cruel and hard-hearted as you can be. We women must get up in the night and attend to the children if they be sick, while you lay and sleep as soundly as if there were no cares in the world."

"But, my dear," I answered, "I was very weary, and wanted to sleep."

"So did I," she replied; "but no, I had to keep awake. If I hadn't, I don't know where that dear little boy would have been by this time. It isn't owing to you that he is now alive."

"Well, I should just like to know," I said, maliciously, "to whom it is owing, if not to me?"

"Well, I will tell you," said my wife; "it is to me and——"

"Who?" I asked, raising myself on one elbow, and regarding her closely, as she paused a moment, before uttering the final name.

"Katy, to be sure," she continued; "weren't we obliged, I should like to know, to soak the little fellow's feet, and rub sweet oil upon his chest, and put flannels, dipped into hot vinegar and pepper, around his throat, and then coax him to take medicine?"

"Oh!" I exclaimed, as I sank down among the pillows, "I thought——"

"Never mind what you thought," she interposed. "The truth is you only think of your own ease and comfort, and never care whether I enjoy myself or not."

"My dear," I said, "you must excuse me, but I wish to go to sleep. I will hear the remainder of what you have to say in the morning; because if there be one thing I dislike more than another, it is to listen to a certain lecture at night."

"For a married man of your experience," she said, "it seems to me you are vastly particular. Now it appears to me that if I wished to lecture you—which, thank fortune, I do not—that the present time would be the most appropriate, and also the least liable to interruption. You cannot say, though, that I have ever condescended to lecture you. I trust I have more respect for my husband than to utter a word to him which would have the effect of lowering him in my own estimation. I do think, however, that you sometimes deserve a reprimand, although you do not get it."

"Will you oblige me, my love," I said tenderly, "by going to sleep?"

"Certainly," she answered.

There was a silence for three minutes and a half. I sank into a doze. My wife started me by exclaiming:

"I do think you treat me too badly. I am not allowed to express an opinion of my own, and when I try to speak you endeavour to stop me by telling me to go to sleep. It was not so once. I have seen the time, when you were only too glad to listen to whatever I had to say; and would willingly sit up all night, to hear me talk. I would only let you. I don't understand why you men change so after marriage. I am quite certain that I have not altered in the least. What I was, in disposition and feelings, when a girl, I am now, but no one would recognize you for the sensible, smooth spoken young man of—how many years ago were we married?"

"I am sure I don't know, and what is more, I don't care," I replied. "Now will you be quiet, and let me go to sleep, or not?"

"Oh, yes, go to sleep if you want to," she answered; and another brief silence ensued, broken by my wife sobbingly exclaiming:

"Only nine years next June since we were married, and to hear you say now that you don't know nor care when it took place, is a paupor in the Commercial Hospital in that city. I have seen him addressing the Legislature of that State at Perrisburg, and listened to him with the attention and deference that would have been paid to Daniel Webster or any other public man of his age.

I know a lady, the descendant of a distinguished Governor of Massachusetts, who supports herself by her needle, and the niece of a Governor of New Jersey, still living, who washes for a living.

I know a lady, who, thirty years ago, in the vicinity in which I then lived, was the cynosure of all eyes, one of the most graceful of the sex, and moving in the first circles of wealth and fashion, now engaged in drudgery and dependence, at one dollar and fifty cents per week. All these resides in this city.

HOW KNOX AND LUTHER PRAYED.

During the troublous times of Scotland, when the Parish Court and aristocracy were arming themselves to suppress the Reformation in that land, and the cause of Protestant Christianity was in imminent peril, late on a certain night, the vigilant and unwearied John Knox was seen to leave his study, and to pass from the house down into an enclosure to the rear of it. He was followed by a friend; when, after a few moments of silence, his voice was heard as if in prayer. In another moment the accents deepened into intelligible words, and the earnest petition went up to heaven: "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" Then a pause of hushed stillness, when again the petition broke forth: "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" Once more all was voiceless and noiseless, when with a yet intenser pathos, the thrice repeated intercession struggled forth: "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" And God gave him Scotland, in spite of Mary and her Cardinal Beaton; a land and a church of noble Christian loyalty to Christ and His crown, even unto this day. How could it be otherwise?

So Luther, when Germany and the Reformation seemed to be lost, and human help was none; this was the prayer which that second Moses went and laid down at the foot of the eternal throne: "Oh God Almighty, God everlasting! How dreadful is this world! behold how its mouth opens to swallow me up, and how small is my faith in Thee! If I am to depend upon any strength of the world, all is over. The knell is struck. Sentence is gone forth. Oh God! oh God! oh, Thou my God! help me against all the wisdom of the world. Thou shouldst do this. The work is not mine but Thine. I have no business here. The cause is Thine, and it is righteous and everlasting. Oh, Lord, help me. Oh, faithful and unchangeable God. I lean not on man. My God, my God, dost Thou not hear? My God, art Thou no longer living? Nay, Thou canst not die. Thou dost not hide Thyself. I know it. Therefore, oh God, accomplish Thine own will. Forsake me not, for the sake of Thy beloved Son, Jesus Christ, my defence, my buckler, and my stronghold."

But he had not done. Once more the tide of emotion and importunity bursts forth, "Lord, where art Thou? My God, where art thou? Come, I pray thee; I am ready. Behold me prepared to lay down my life for Thy truth. For the cause is holy. It is thine own. I will not let Thee go—no, nor yet for all eternity! My soul is Thine.—Yes, I have thine own word to assure me of it. My soul belongs to Thee, and will abide with Thee forever. Amen! O, God, send help! Amen!"

The history of the salvation and sanctification of human souls hitherto, is the history of such praying as this, in spirit, if not in these or any other words. Such sacred earnestness and familiarity never offends but rather greatly delights, the Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ, who through Him is the God of all grace and consolation.—Congregationalist.

UPS AND DOWNS IN LIFE.

(By a Resident of Cincinnati.)

It is useful as well as interesting to notice the changes for the better or worse, which ten or fifteen years serve to operate in a community.

I know a man on Main-street, who was refused credit in 1850 for a stove worth $12. He is now director in one of our banks, and is worth $150,000 at least.—Every cent of this has been made in Cincinnati during that period.

I know an extensive dealer in this city, now worth $100,000 who can command more money on a short notice, for sixty, ninety, or one hundred and twenty days, than almost any man in Cincinnatti, to whom I, as clerk for a grocery house here in 1850 sold a hogshead of sugar with great misgiving and reluctance, under some apprehension of not getting the money when it became due.

I know a man whose credit in 1850 was such that when I treated him for a keg of saltpetre, my employer told me I might as well have rolled it into the Ohio. He was worth, since that period, in 1857, $100,000 again a bankrupt in 1860, and now worth $20,000.

I know a man good for $30,000, who 10 years ago exhibited a monkey through the streets for a living.

I know a heavy business man, a bank director, who sold apples in a basket when a boy, through the street.

I know one of the first merchants in our city in 1845, who could at that time have bought entire blocks of the city on credit, a director in one of the banks, who, within ten years of that period, died insolvent and intemperate.

Another individual, who was considered in 1837 worth half a million of dollars, has died since, leaving the estate insolvent.

Another individual, of credit equal to all his wants, and worth, at one time, $12,000 and a Judge of our court, died in our city hospital, and was buried at the public expense. I have seen him once and again presiding at public meetings.

The founder of the Penitentiary system in Pennsylvania, and well known in that State and elsewhere as a public man, died

ADVENTURES OF A LOVE-LORN.

On Monday, at the Leeds Town Hall, a young woman of interesting appearance was charged with assuming male attire under the following extraordinary circumstances:—Police-constable Ingraham, of the Leeds force, was on duty in the Chapelton road, on Saturday evening, shortly before 9 o'clock, when he was accosted by a smart-looking young fellow, dressed somewhat like a navigator, who asked him the way to Harrowgate. The traveller wore a workman's blouse, an ordinary white shirt, a pair of fustain trowsers a dark silk neckerchief, and a black and white hat. His hair was cut rather short behind, and he had on his feet a pair of women's shoes. The policeman, from the appearance of his interrogator's bust, was satisfied that he was a woman in disguise, and he consequently took him in charge, and marched him to the Leeds Town Hall, where the sex of the stranger was soon determined by the female searcher. On being asked by the authorities why she had assumed male attire, the female told the somewhat romantic story:—Her name, she said, was Sarah Blaymires, and she resides near Crowslane, Great Horton, Bradford. She is the daughter of a respectable farmer and butcher, who died about four years ago, leaving her seven cottages and other property. For nearly seven years a butcher residing near Knaresborough has been paying his addresses to her, but there have been several "slips between the cup and the lip," and the "hope deferred had made her sick." About a month ago, the young man again promised to marry her, but she had been so frequently disappointed that she was afraid, she states, to believe in such happiness. In order that she might be secured against any disappointment, she resolved to get out of the way for a little time and with the object of adequately concealing herself, she adopted the expedient of disguising herself in male attire. In the first instance, she provided herself with money by drawing the rents that were due to her, and she then set off on her travels. Since thus leaving Great Horton, about three weeks ago, Sarah has visited a number of towns in the West riding, and was everywhere received and treated as a man, both at the lodging houses she used, and the various places of public resort she frequented. In fact her disguise was so complete that it was only by the exercise of great shrewdness and penetration that any variance from the gait of the sex assumed could be detected. When she was thus ungallantly detained by Constable Ingraham, she was on her way to Knaresboro', to see what course of conduct her lover was following, and whether, amid the pressure of business engagements, he ever found time to think of the fora damsel he had so often neglected. Miss Blaymires created considerable talk throughout the West riding about a couple of years ago, by her brave and determined defence of her dwelling house against burglars. The magistrates, who heard the case before the public were admitted, warned the fair adventuress of the risks she run by indulging in a course of proceedings so dangerous as that for which she was charged, and then discharged her from custody.

MAGNANIMOUS CONDICT OF THE MALE SEX.

Women may be said to enjoy almost the monopoly of personal beauty. A good-humored writer thus defined her position in this respect as contrasted with the opposite sex:—

If you, ladies, are much handsomer than we, it is but just you should acknowledge that we have helped you, by voluntarily leaving ourselves ugly. Your superiority in duty is made up of two things; first, the care which you take to increase your charms; secondly, the zeal which we have shown to heighten them by the contrast of our finished ugliness—the shadow which we supply to our sunshine.

Your long, planet, wavy tresses are all the more beautiful, for we cut our hair short—your hands are all the whiter, small and more delicate, because we reserve to ourselves those tolls and exercises which make the hands hard and large.

We have devoted entirely to your use flowers, feathers, ribbons, jewelry, silks, gold and silver embroideries. Still more to increase the difference between the sexes, which is your greatest charm, and to give you the handsome share, we have divided with you the lion of nature. To you we have given the colors that are rich and splendid, soft and harmonious; for ourselves we have kept those that are dark and dead. We have given you sun and light, we have kept night and darkness.

We have monopolized the hard stony roads that enlarge the feet; we have let you walk only on carpets.

...A drunken fellow ran against a house which had been newly painted, shoving himself clear by a vigorous effort, he took one glimpse at his shoulder, another at the house, and a third at his hand, and exclaimed: Well, that's a darned careless track in whoever painted that house, to leave it standing out all night for the people to run against.

—AN—HONEST PUBLICAN'S
ADVERTISEMENT.
FRIENDS and neighbors, grateful for the liberal encouragement received from you, and having supplied my Shop and Tavern with a new and ample Stock of choice Wines, Spirits, and Malt Liquors, I thankfully inform you that I continue to make Drunkards, Paupers and Beggars, for the sober, industrious, and respectable community to support. My liquors may excite you to riot, robbery and blood, and will certainly diminish your comforts, augment your expenses, and shorten your lives. I confidently recommend them as sure to multiply fatal accidents, and distressing diseases, and likely to render these incurable. They will agreeably deprive some of life, some of reason, many of character, and all of peace—will make fathers fiends, wives widows, mothers cruel, children orphans, and all poor. I will train the young to ignorance, dissipation, infidelity, lewdness, and every vice—corrupt the ministers of religion—obstruct the gospel—defile the Church, and cause as much temporal and eternal death as I can.
I will thus "accommodate the public," it may be at the cost of my never-dying soul. I have the family to support—the trade pays—and the public encourage it. I have a character from my Minister, and a license from the Magistrate, my traffic is lawful; Christians countenance it; and if I do not bring these evils upon you somebody else will. I know the Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill;" pronounces a "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," and enjoins me not to "put a stumbling-block in a brother's way." I also read that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," and I cannot expect the drunkard maker, without repentance, to share a better fate; but, I wish a lazy living, and have deliberately resolved to gather the wages of iniquity and fatten on the ruin of my species. I shall therefore carry on my trade with energy, and do my best to diminish the wealth of the nation, impair the health of the people, and endanger the safety of the State. As my traffic flourishes in proportion to your ignorance and sensuality, I will do my utmost to prevent your intellectual elevation, moral purity, social happiness, and eternal welfare.
Should you doubt my ability I refer you to the Pawn-Shop, the Poor-house, the Police-office, the Hospital, the Jail, and the Gallows, where so many of my customers have gone. The sight of them will satisfy you that I do what I promise.
JUDAS HEARTLESS.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF A YOUNG WOMAN.

(From the London Penotype.)

We record a most extraordinary disappearance of a young woman, from her residence in this city, and her supposed suicide by drowning in the River Thames. The facts we were enabled to glean are as follows:—It appears that Hannah Mason, who had been living in London for some time past in a private family, left the house on Wednesday last, stating that she was going out to look for a situation. Not having returned to the afternoon of Thursday, the party with whom she stayed became alarmed, made all possible inquiry respecting her, but failed to obtain any clue as to where she had gone. On Thursday evening the workbox of the missing girl was examined, and a letter found therein addressed to her father, at Woodstock, giving a detailed account of her past life. We give a copy of the letter, as follows:—

June 10, 1861.

"O, my dear father! my heart is broke now, and I leave this to let you know my end, and you have drove me to it. I love you still. I owe I have done wrong, but I am not the first one that has done the same. I have not any desire to live any longer in this world, as I have no home on this earth. I die without any hope of heaven, to be lost forever; as long as eternal ages roll round I am lost, lost to all eternity. I am ready to say that I am sorry I ever was born. I might have done good, but as the Psalmist says, "When I would do good, evil was present with me." O, tell my sisters and my dear brother to beware of evil company, and all young people that hear of my end. O, that I could clasp the hands of my sisters and my brother, and tell them my mind and my trouble, as this is the last of me in this world. My dear father, I have not a word to my mother, only she was the cause of this, but I forgive her all she has done. O, that I ever was born. O, father, remember me, when this lock of my hair you see, and press it to your heart. That I from you was drawn away, which man has broke my heart. Come all you young maidens, a warning take by me and never let a young man trifle with you on land or sea, for they will promise to marry you, and when six months has rolled gone by they will say that they were only in fun. You all may find my body near Blackfriar's Bridge, and you all will find what I done it for, and young people take warning by me when you hear my destiny. Father, I might have been saved, but now I am eternally lost. Born in 1841, and committed suicide in 1861; aged nineteen years and six months, one week and three days.

Your no more for ever,
HANNAH MASON.

Mr. W. G. Barron, London, C. W.

The letter in question was left at the police station, and inclosed was a lock of hair. The police yesterday instituted inquiries respecting the girl, and also made an examination in the vicinity of the river, but nothing was ascertained relative to the whereabouts of the girl. We understand that the chief of police has since been informed that Hannah was seen walking on the street on Thursday, so after all she may have thought twice before plunging into the deep rolling river, and the whole affair may not prove such a serious one as the letter describes.

The police were engaged yesterday afternoon, with boats and poles, searching the river by the vicinity in Blackfriar's Bridge, but they failed to discover anything in the shape of the missing girl.

A KID GLOVED SAMSON.

On Saturday, about nine o'clock, A. M., as the train westward was within three or four miles of Chicago, on the Fort Wayne Road, a horse was discovered on the railroad track and between the rails. The train was stopped, and the workmen were sent to clear the track. It was then discovered that the body of the horse was resting on the stumps. His legs, having passed through the open spaces, were too short to reach the ground. Boards and rails were brought, and the open space in front of the horse piled up, making a plank road for him, in case he should be got up, and by means of ropes one of his fore feet were raised, and there matters came to a halt. It seemed that no strength or stratagem could avail to release the animal. Lovers of board were splintered, and men tugged at the ropes in vain, when a passenger who was quietly looking on, stepped forward leisurely, slipped off a pair of tanned kids, seized the horse by the tail, and with a tremendous force hurled him forward upon the plank road.—No one assisted, and indeed the whole thing was done so quickly, that assistance was impossible. The horse walked off, looking foolish, and casting suspicious glances towards his caudal extremity. The loafers-on laughed and shouted, while the stranger resumed his kids, muttered something about the inconvenience of railway delays, lit a cigar and walked slowly into the smoking car. He was finely formed, of muscular appearance, was very fashionably dressed, wore a moustache and whiskers of an auburn or reddish color, and to all questions as to who he was, he only answered that he was a Pennsylvanian, travelling westward for his health. The horse weighed 12,000.

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.

A correspondent tells the following story:—An incident was related to me last night by a lady of Alexandria which affords a strike striking illustration of civil war. The lady in question has resided with an only daughter for many years in Alexandria. About nine months since, a mutual friend introduced a young gentleman of Richmond to the family. The young people became intimately acquainted, and, quite naturally, fell in love. The parents on both sides consenting, the parties were betrothed, and the marriage day was fixed for 4th of July instant. In the meantime, however, Virginians were called on to decide on which side they would stand. The ladies declared themselves on the side of Government but the gentleman joined the forces of his state. No opportunity was afforded for the interchange of sentiments between the young folks or anything settled as to their future arrangements. Matters thus remained till the 4th of July, when exactly within an hour of the time originally fixed for the marriage, intelligence was conveyed to the residence of the ladies that the young man had been shot by a sentry two days before, while attempting to desert to join his bride. His betrothed did not shed a tear, but standing erect, smiled, and then remarked to her mother, "I am going to desert too," fell to the floor, while the bride's blood bubbled from her lips, and the morning her remains were conveyed to their last resting place.

Why would ladies make better traders and peddlers than men? Because they never get shaved!

"Is your watch a lever?" "Lever! yes. I have to leave her at the watchmaker's once a week for repairs."

A deacon who became rich in a grocery, used to boast how much he had done for the cause of temperance, by mixing at least a gallon of pure water with every gallon of liquor he sold.

A certain lawyer had his portrait taken in his favourite attitude—standing with his hand in his pocket. His friends and clients all went to see it, and everybody exclaimed "O, how like! it's the very picture of him!"

An old farmer only dissented—"No 'taint like!"

Exclaimed everybody—"Just show us where 'taint like."

"'Taint—no 'taint," replied the farmer; "don't you see he has got his hand in his own pocket, 'twould be as like again if he had it in somebody else's."

The following anecdote was once related by Wendell Phillips:—A dark coloured man once went to Portland, Maine, and attended church. He went into a good pew when the next neighbour to the one who owned it said:

"What do you put a nigger into your pew for?"

"Nigger! he's no nigger; he's an Abyssinian."

"Can't help that; he's as black as the ace of spades."

"Why, sir, he's a corresponding member."

"I don't help that; I tell you, he's black."

"He, he is worth a million of dollars."

"It is though! I misunderstood me."

CANADA VS. THE STATES AS A HOME FOR EMIGRANTS.

(From the Quebec Chronicle.)

Texas is hardly a spot in any part of Canada East or West, that does not present evident marks of prosperity to the most casual glance. Upper Canada, being the more recently settled, or, in common language, the "newer" country, it is there that the progress of the people most strikes the eye. On farms, where fields are hardly cleared from stumps, you may see the log-hut where the settler first slept and cooked his meals, side by side with the frame shanty in which he was afterwards contented to dwell, and both of them turned into stables and hen-roosts, while a commodious residence of brick or stone, surrounded with rising shrubberies and orchards, now shelter his family. In Lower Canada, the successive stages of advancing wealth are not in such staring juxtaposition; but the population, frugal and industrious, is well housed into most comfortable residences, every man having his own farm, raising more than enough for his own consumption, owning his own cattle and horses, and going well clothed to his daily work or to his Sunday devotions. The towns in both parts of the country partake of the prosperity of the rural districts. In the comparatively old cities of Quebec and Montreal, property has been continually advancing in value ever since their foundation, while in the newer ones of the West it has recently been sold at as much per foot as it cost per acre a score of years ago. It is only within the ten years last past that we have at all directed our attention to manufactures, and already we take rank as a manufacturing people. Our forwarding interests are extensive. Socially, we combine in a remarkable degree the few advantages of a Republican with the many of a Monarchial system. We honor rank, but only where accompanied by merit, and indeed merit is after all the best passport to it. Nor is it at all difficult for the poor emigrant to rise. Two instances, not by any means solitary, occur to us. He who died, three years ago, the richest contractor in Canada West or on the continent, came into the Province with nothing but his pick and his spade as capital. He who died a few months since, one of the most respected judges of Canada East, commenced his career by unsuccessfully competing for a bank messenger's situation. Space would fail if we attempted to allude, within the limits of a single article, to the merits of our educational system, to the grandeur of our public works, to the excellence of our parliamentary and municipal systems, the riches of our fisheries, the extent of our mineral resources, the healthiness of our climate, the consequent longevity of our people, or the other many points which combine to render Canada a goodly land to live in, and indeed, "The land of Hope" for the European emigrant.

If we look, soberly and without prejudice, to the prairies of Illinois and Iowa, we shall see a marked contrast to our own country. We shall find a treeless district, which imports even its deals for building from the Canadian side of Lake Huron. We shall discover a soil, rich and deep it is true, but often cold and wet, and always prolific of fever and ague. We shall be told of the rapidity of vegetation and the early harvests in Southern Illinois; but that is of no advantage, for the wheat of Illinois is not as good as ours—no one pretends that the soil produces more bushels of it to the acre, or that two harvests can be reaped per annum there any more than here—and the heat which brings the green things forward in the spring parches them terribly in the summer. The public institutions of the Western States cannot compare with our own; and the whole reign is inferior to this country, except as to its crop of spread eagle-orators, voracious land speculators, Union-saving politicians, and wild cat banks.

Notwithstanding all this, however, we find scores of emigrants every week going through Canada to the West,—passing by our doors and preferring our neighbour's gall! What can the reason be?

The reason is, we believe, chiefly the efficient organization on the part of our neighbours for advertising their country, and providing facilities for reaching it. The Illinois Central Railway Company, endowed by the United States with an immense quantity of land, has its agents in Europe and in every town in Canada. There is not a leading newspaper in England or the Continent without the Company's advertisements, and not a railway station in Canada without its attractive placards. Its pamphlets have been printed and disseminated by the hundred thousand. Its lecturers have travelled all over the civilized world. And it pursues the wise policy of trying to locate settlers near its own line, convinced that casual passenger traffic is not the least important source of railway revenue, and that a settler near any given station who travels short distances now and then, who exports his produce and imports his merchandize by rail, is worth to the Company many times over what a passenger is, who goes over the whole length of its rails to-day, and never afterwards requires to buy its tickets.

Whether the Canada Central Railway, which, like the Illinois Central, is endowed with millions of acres of public land, will soon commence operations, we cannot say. We hope it will, for it would be an efficient agent in inducing settlement here. If not, then the Government will have to persevere in and redouble the energetic endeavours commenced last season to attract emigration to this country and to locate the emigrants here; for our steamboat owners, as well as the Grand Trunk Railway Company, fancy they see their interest in sending through to the West every passenger they can lay hold of—the Illinois agents are here in Quebec even, busier among the Norwegians and other strangers than our own officials are, and we have a very strong suspicion that one of our Government employes, placed in a respectable and important position, is endeavouring to serve two masters, not without pay from both, by counselling those who cannot speak our tongue to go through Canada to the Western States.

A WHOLE FAMILY MURDER A MAN AND HIS WIFE IN A CORNFIELD.

(Correspondence of the St. Louis Democrat.)

Camp Blair, S. W. B. P. B. R., June 22rd, 1861.

I send you the particulars of a horrible murder perpetrated about ten miles from this place on Wednesday last. It seems that there was some dispute between two families about a track of land. On the day mentioned, as Mr. McNull, the murdered man, was planting in the field, he was met by Mr. L. Wilson, his wife, (Wilson's) with their two sons and daughters. Wilson began abusing McNull, the whole family threatening him with annihilation, and finally told McNull that if he did not leave the country that night he would be mobbed and forced to leave. The latter replied that he would die first, upon which Mrs. Wilson snapped her fingers and said to the rest, "Come on boys; damn him let's kill him!" A gun was levelled at McNull, but it failing to go off, he was struck on the back of the head and felled to the earth. Mrs. W. and her sons and daughters, with the old man, then fell upon him and beat him until life was extinct. The tragedy, however, did not stop here. Mrs. McNull, from her house, seeing her husband thus brutally assaulted, ran out to assist him. She was met by old Wilson, who caught her by the hair of the head pulled her down and stabbed her in the back. The Wilson girls then fell upon her and beat her until they were actually tired. They then left their victims and fled.

Soon after the occurrence, a messenger came into Camp Blair for assistance from the troops to arrest the murderers. Captain McFall at once started for the scene of the tragedy with twenty men, but on his arrival at the spot he found that the civil authorities had arrested the murderers. They were all captured and securely confined. The people about the country were intensely excited, and threatened to lynch the whole Wilson family, but sober judgment prevailed and the law will take its course. Mr. McNull was buried on the next day. He is represented as an honest, intelligent, hard-working farmer, and was a strong Union man. His murderer was a notorious Secessionist. This evening I hear that Mrs. McNull is not expected to live, her wounds proving mortal.

MR. FOLEY'S SPEECH AT THE DECLARATION AT NORTH WATERLOO.

Mr. Foley, the member elect having been introduced to the meeting, said—Mr. Returning Officer, Ladies and Gentlemen, never before in my life on any occasion have I felt so proud and happy as at this time.—The contest just concluded, and through which I have had to fight so laboriously, has been by no means an easy one. While in Perth I have travelled through fourteen municipalities, in each and every one of which I met with a success beyond my most ardent expectations. I feel proud to think that, although I never set my foot on any township in this county, I was elected by the handsome majority of 421. (Loud cheers.) To-day I feel more happy and more satisfied than ever; when after several years of untiring political service, men of all political shades and opinions have united in sending me again to Parliament. This day therefore, I think I am in a proper position to say that I have reason to be the proudest man in all Canada. (Cheers.) There were several cases, sir, in which men offered themselves for the suffrages of two constituencies. My hon. friend Mr. O. Mowatt, a worthy man and an exemplary politician, sought the confidence of the electors of South Ontario while he also contested the city of Kingston against the Atty. General West. My friend Mr. Wilson claimed the free and independent votes of the Western Division of Toronto, while at the same time he was successful in his candidature of North York. Although both of these gentlemen were unsuccessful in obtaining the confidence of the four constituencies alluded to, they nevertheless made a good fight, and their defeat can never be regarded as a triumph over the principles in the interest of which they so manly, so bravely, and so patriotically contended. (Hear, hear.) It is with pride that I stand here—and I hope I may not be considered guilty of vain boasting—and say that having offered myself as a candidate for the two counties, I am the only man who has been elected to such an honor—an honor which I now frankly accredit to the noble men of North Waterloo. They saw the question at issue. It was a question of principle, a question of opposition to the present imbecile Ministry. Readily and willingly were they prepared to give up their own representative for the success and advancement of the great Reform party, and in doing so they have enabled the people of Perth to redeem themselves and to carry that keenly-fought election against the existing Administration. I cannot but feel glad at the result of the election in that county, but for your sakes I feel more intensely satisfied. The question now naturally comes up, what will be the issue of the electoral contest into which this Province has been precipitated—the event of the struggle through which its people have just emerged? The fact cannot be concealed that one result, at least, of this general election has been the return of a majority of Parliamentary representatives opposed toto to the career and policy of those now on the Treasury benches. The issue is quite evident. Returners will now obtain that justice for which they have so long and undauntedly battled, and will now at length have the license—because it is their own—of carrying out their long-cherished liberal principles. If they fail in doing that throw us overboard as you did them; reject us at the polls as indignantly as you have them—deliver us up to the same fate, and send us to the same doom with which they have been so justly overtaken. (Applause.) I am exceedingly sorry that the labour and fatigue of the last three weeks have so unfitted me from addressing you at any great length at this time, but I must again thank you most kindly and heartily for this real expression of your confidence in me. I shall never, I assure you, on any occasion either by my judgment or my voice betray this sacred and honorable trust now reposed in me by the noble electors of North Waterloo. (Applause.) I think all my old supporters present, and especially my old and faithful friend, Mr. Jonathan Bowman, will bear me out in this assertion that for the seven years I have had the honor of representing this Riding in Parliament, I have never deviated from the path of duty in which I pledged myself to tread, never swerved from the principles of the party in whose interest I was elected, or broken the promises made to you so long ago on the hustings, and that during all that time I have ever been to this county a warm and true friend. I am very much pleased to notice the presence here to-day of so large a number of my lady friends, and I shall always have a feeling of proud satisfaction in knowing that I enjoy their unabated confidence. (Hear, hear.) But I find that I must be brief in my remarks, and I do so because I wish to introduce my hon. friend Mr Ferguson—a friend who is older to you than I am, and one with whom you have been much longer acquainted. (Hear, hear.) I am happy to say that I have on my left Mr Cowan who is now the representative of South Waterloo.—(Applause.) Waterloo has indeed redeemed itself. We have here the Hon. Mr Ferguson whom I am glad to have with me, as his presence contributes in doing me honor. To Mr Ferguson and my friend Mr. Cowan I now leave you. I must again beg to tender you my most cordial thanks, and in conclusion I would only add that Waterloo will for the future be represented by men who have ever been and shall ever be unflinching, unswerving supporters of the old thorough-going Reform party. (Great cheering.)

A RUN-AWAY NEGRO.

ANNAPOLIS, July 13, 1861.

About 12 o'clock on Thursday night considerable excitement was caused throughout the garrison by the repeated discharge of fire-arms, and the shouts of the sentinels, posted at the railroad-gate, for the Corporal of the guard. Many of the soldiers, awakened from sound sleep, seized their arms, and rushed from their quarters in anticipation of the "long-roll." In a little time quiet was restored, and upon examination it appeared that the trouble was caused by two vagabondish-looking fellows "running the guard" in pursuit of a fugitive slave.—The two white men and the negro were accommodated with quarters in the Guard-house until the following morning, when Col. Joseph C. Pinckney, commanding the post, summoned them before him for examination. One of the men, a recognized "Hound," or "Nigger Hunter," named McCabe, about 22 years of age, a fellow of most brutish countenance, stated that on Wednesday morning, while across the river Severn picking cherries, a negro approached him. He asked him where he was going and to whom he belonged, to which the negro replied what he (McCabe) knew to be false. They walked together towards a piece of woods, when McCabe drawing a revolver turned suddenly upon the negro, and, pointing the weapon at his head, said, "You are a runaway and must go with me." The negro instantly grappled with him, and McCabe discharged the pistol at his breast. The ball glanced and tore the skin and flesh from the negro's breast, almost to the ribs but happily did not enter his body. The scuffle resulted in the negro obtaining possession of the revolver, when McCabe fearing for his life took to his heels. McCabe said that he made his way to Annapolis, and while walking the streets in the evening again met the negro. Procuring another revolver, and the service of one of the policemen of Annapolis, he again set out to capture the negro. After a long chase, the fugitive to escape his pursuers jumped into the river, and swam around the wall into the garrison. McCabe and the officer, a mere boy, ran to the railroad-gate where they were challenged by the sentinel. Both rushed by him, when he fired at them, and reloading fired a second time but without effect, it being impossible to aim correctly as the night was dark.

The guard soon came up and arrested them all. As far as the pursuit of the negro in the city was concerned the statement of McCabe was corroborated by the policeman.

While the examination was progressing, John T. Magruder, the Mayor of the city of Annapolis, came in and suggested to the Colonel that the nigger had better be sent to jail. He said that the laws of the State authorized any man to arrest or shoot down runaway niggers!

During the afternoon, Mr. Ireland, the Postmaster of Annapolis, came to the garrison and whiningly told Colonel Pinckney that he knew the slave's master,—that he was a right smart young feller, and that Nick was his head nigger, and that he wouldn't take $1,500 for him; and concluded by asking the Colonel if he couldn't be allowed to take Nick to his house, where he would keep him and care for him until he (Mr Ireland) could write to his marster. Colonel Pinckney declined, and thus the matter rested until Friday morning, when Mr. Ireland again came to the garrison and said the slave's master had come and wanted an interview with the Colonel. The latter replied that the man was dangerously wounded and was in the hospital, where he would be kept for the present. Soon after Colonel Pinckney left the garrison for the Baltimore steamboat, but had scarcely set his foot on board before he was accosted by the Mayor and the owner of Nick, the former being exceedingly excited and anxious about the matter. The owner said angrily, "I want my nigger," to which Col. Pinckney coolly replied, "The man is badly wounded, and I have sent him to the hospital where he will be well treated."

Owner—But I want you to give him to me. I'll send him to the jail and have him attended to there.

Col. P.—The disturbance in regard to this man occurred in the garrison, and I intend investigating it further.

Mayor (supplicatingly)—I think, Colonel, the nigger would be safer in jail.

Col. P.—O, he's safe enough. I shall keep him in the hospital for a while.

The owner was about giving vent to some vile language, when the Mayor led him away. Thus the matter rests.

MINISTERS AND POLITICS.

We propose to make a few remarks now, when the subject is pressed upon us by events which are before the country. Christian ministers, like men in any other calling, have sacred duties and obligations as citizens, and we hold those recreant to their real obligations who should neglect to throw their influence, as citizens, on the side of right and justice. There are in all free governments constantly arising questions of public policy, which cross the track of morals, and often trench upon the province of religious liberty. And no servant of Jesus Christ should fail, in a becoming manner and time, to enter his protest against all encroachments on religious freedom or sound morality. But while we claim these rights and privileges in their fullest extent for all Christian ministers and Christian men—for there is a length which such men can go even in what may be called party politics that does not in the least compromise their character in the estimation of any reasonable man,—yet there is a line which no Christian minister, at least, may cross without serious detriment, if not ruin, to his character and usefulness. We have had within a few years back several professed ministers of the gospel who have set up for Members of Parliament; and within a few days one has been elected. We shall say nothing about the law of the land, which has been set aside in such cases. This aspect of the question some others will probably examine. The point which we propose to consider very briefly is set before us by the course of the Rev.—we beg pardon—Mr. William Ryerson. He was advised to enter the arena of party politics as a candidate for parliamentary honours; and all he had to do was to go down to Toronto, "get his name stricken from the roll of ministers," and then he was all right!!! A professed politician, when conversing with us in the cars respecting this case, thought that it was all right! But what are we, as Christians, to think of this? The Christian Guardian, with evident approval of the course of Mr. Ryerson, tells its readers that he got his name stricken from the roll! We ask again, is this all? Has it come to this that the ministry, taken up professedly on the call of the Holy Spirit, can be set aside at the mere wish or whim of the party, by the mere stroke of the pen, without any sin or blame-worthiness? Do the Methodists hold, in regard to their ministry, as they do in regard to their membership, that they may be minis to-day, and children of the devil to-morrow?

We confess that there is to us something shocking, in this flippant way of disposing of obligations so solemnly assumed before God and before men. It reminds us of the preacher, who when provoked, threw off his black coat, saying, "Lie there, divinity, till I thrash the man!" Imagine Paul or Peter hastening up to Jerusalem to have their "names stricken from the roll," for the sake of any political office on earth!—Fancy the beloved disciple, even in his extreme old age, hankering after worldly politics, and the strifes of ungodly men. And yet here we have an old man 70 years of age, deaf and feeble, no longer able to preach Christ and Him crucified, yet hastened to the midnight strifes of political partizans! We are not personally acquainted with the Rev. W. Ryerson, and we have not the slightest feeling against him; but we pronounce his case to be a public scandal and shame to Christians of all denominations. And that denomination whose cupidity has urged this old minister into this course, and sustained him in it, have done more to bring reproach upon religion by this act, than they can undo for many years. The Methodist Conference wanted Government aid for their College, and any measure that would secure this, any men that would vote for this, must be sustained. We are sorry for the reproach which they thus bring upon the cause of Christ. They will find yet, that the end does not always sanctify the means. Ministers who take the course pursued by Mr. Ryerson, emphatically "give up to party what was meant for mankind."—Canadian Baptist.

THE POSITION OF THE REBEL ARMIES.

A correspondent calls our attention to what he conceives to be the menacing position occupied by the two principal divisions of the insurgent forces—viz.: those commanded respectively by Johnston and Beauregard. Without professing to be in possession of sufficient reliable facts to form for ourselves a positive conclusion on the subject, we will briefly submit the grounds of our correspondents apprehensions.

The south bank of the Potomac, from the Chain Bridge, four miles above Washington, to Martinsburgh and Williamsport, —a distance of more than seventy-five miles —is in the undisputed possession of the insurgents. The north bank of the Potomac until recently was guarded by Col. Stones command, from the Great Falls to the Point of Rocks. But the withdrawal of Col. Stone, with five or six regiments, from that position, and sending him to the support of Gen. Patterson, beyond the Blue Ridge, and south of the Potomac, has left the defensive line of the river too weak, and liable, at any time, to be crossed by the enemy anywhere east of the Catochin Mountain, in force, without encountering much serious resistance.

In the meantime, Johnston has thus far shown no disposition to fight, but has allowed Gen. Patterson, with a slight show of resistance, to cross the Potomac—when Jackson's advance guard might have disputed the passage successfully—and establish himself on the Virginian side of the river. And more recently it would seem from our accounts, he has drawn the main body of our command further south and east, still receding from Patterson, but at the same time still approaching nearer to Manassas Junction and to Washington. Adding to the significance of this strategy, are the scraps of information brought round from Richmond by way of Charleston and Louisville —all going to show the formidable increase of the forces under Johnston's command, and all apparently indicating preparations for an offensive movement.

On the other hand, the force under Beauregard, at Manasses Junction, with advanced posts thrown forward almost or quite to Fairfax Court House, is also receiving constant accessions to its strength from Richmond. This division commands the whole ground west of the Chain Bridge, on the south side of the river, and is in undisturbed communication with Johnston's command with which it can combine at any point they may select, on either bank of the Potomac. Our correspondent think there are indications—inconclusive, he admits, but yet sufficient to excite a suspicion—that the forces under Beauregard and Johnston, are now drawing together, preparatory to crossing the Potomac in great force, and marching either upon Baltimore, to excite and sustain an already organised insurrection there—or upon Washington, whose approaches from the North and West are covered by no defensive works.

Of course, such a movement as is here apprehended would expose the rebel armies to great peril. It would be impossible for them to keep up their communications with the South, which would be open both to the advance of Patterson and a detachment from McDowell's command. It would, in fact, be to stake the fate of the rebel army and the very existence of the bastard Confederacy on the hazard of a battle. Yet, it may possibly be a question whether the present condition and future prospects of the conspirators in command may not, in their view of the chances, make such an advance, and the risk of a battle, for which they are collecting their entire strength—with the hope if successful, of taking and holding the Capital, and transferring the seat of war to the soil of Maryland, with the resources of Baltimore at their back—after all, though hazardous, yet by far the most promising and hopeful policy they can adopt.

We have not sufficient data, in the shape of any really reliable information of the enemy's strength and the present distribution of his forces, to be able to judge of the probability that he may undertake, or the possibility that he will succeed in such an enterprise. We should think, however, that it covers a chance of success, which, in view of the momentous consequences that would flow from it, ought to be carefully guarded against. The balloon observations which have been made from Shuter's Hill and Fall's Church, might be advantageously repeated from some high points near the Great Falls and the mouth of Seneca Creek unless our military commanders are prepared to make a reconnoissance enforce South of the Potomac, with a view to ascertain whether there are any intrenched camps in process of formation, or large collections of troops anywhere visible, on the Virginia side, in that region.

A bold and unexpected movement of the rebel army upon Washington, coupled with its successful and rapid passage of the Potomac, and offer of battle on the road to the Capital, would be certain to produce great alarm throughout the country, and very probably suffice to precipitate Baltimore into immediate revolt. We trust, at least, that the danger may be looked into, and, if it really exists, effectually guarded against. If such an offensive movement should be made, it will doubtless be with the entire available force at the command of the rebels, which may be temporarily increased by heavy drafts ventured at the expense of other exposed points, such as Norfolk, Yorktown and Fredericksburg.—Every risk should certainly be incurred, all resources submitted to, every muscle of the insurgents put to its utmost strain, to render the forces to be concentrated for this one decisive effort, if possible, overwhelming at least on the field of battle. A victory with the occupation of Washington and Baltimore, they would think, would compensate for all else. Baggage-waggons and camp equipage and supplies would be left behind, for if the attack were successful, they would find in Washington and Baltimore an abundance of all such material to satisfy their immediate necessities.

We have not the data, we repeat to enable us to estimate the chances in favor of the success of such a movement, but we trust that our military guardians have weighed them well.—N. Y. Times.

GRAND POLITICAL OVATION.

We are happy to announce that a grand Opposition ovation, in honor of the six successful candidates in this and the neighboring Counties of Northumberland, Durham and Victoria, at the late elections, is in contemplation to take place at Cobourg at an early day. We can pledge Peterborough to join in the glorious triumph with her sister Counties, and suitable arrangements will be made here as soon as the day is known. The price of tickets will probably not exceed $1, thereby enabling every one to participate. The Cobourg Sun fitly remarks:—"No more suitable place than Cobourg, and no more suitable room than the Victoria Hall, could be selected for the auspicious gathering. Here is where the ministry expected an ovation. Here they had prepared the paraphernalia of victory. But now they find the tables turned on them completely."

THE LATE ELECTION.

There probably never was an election held in Upper Canada in which such a diversity of opinion existed as to the issues before the country as the one just held.—It has been stoutly affirmed by the Ministerial press that the main ones were, disunion and "looking to Washington," while the Opposition press as stoutly maintained that the only issue was non-confidence in the existing Administration. And we feel confident that the various candidates before the electors were either approved of or rejected in the various constituencies in consequence of their declared intention of opposing or supporting the Administration. This point was not brought out in the addresses of the candidates in this County, but on the Nomination Day Col. Haultain expressly declared that the difference between Mr. Conger and himself while they advocated a similar line of policy was that he (Mr. C.) was willing to carry out his policy by supporting a Ministry who had positively ignored the question of representation by population, the leading part of that policy, while he (Col. H.) could have no confidence in a Ministry the head of which most positively declared that that subject should not be taken up for 10 years to come. He laid serious charges against the Administration which he proved, committing himself fairly to the question of want of confidence in the men who have lately ruled over us. And he goes to Parliament advocating the measures wanted by the people generally, irrespective of the party by whom these can be obtained, at the same time a decided oppositionist to the Cartier-Macdonald Administration.—His opinion of their demerits is founded upon their former misdoings, and while his views of their past conduct must necessarily imply a want of confidence, his opposition will not be factious, hindering necessary and useful legislation, but at the proper time when a direct vote is asked for, we have no hesitancy in saying it will be against the Ministry.

We state this from the conviction that an Administration similar to the preceeding one will be in power, and we say without fear of successful contradiction that in this County the question decided at the Polls by the people was confidence or non-confidence in the Administration. They have given an unmistakeable vote of non-confidence in the Cartier-Macdonald Ministry. When we consider that a comparative stranger was brought out at the eleventh hour against an old stager, one too who had received a great deal of credit for opening up the back country, and who certainly has shown a large share of public spirit; taking these considerations into account, there is no difficulty in arriving at the rate of discount in which the Administration is held by the County of Peterborough. "Glorious Old Norfolk" is applied to a County for its reputed stern adherence to principle, and never did we feel so disposed to use the adjective to our own good County as on the present occasion. It is undeniably a sterling constituency—Reform to the backbone—adhering unflinchingly to the great principles long held by the friends of the people during the reign of arbitrary sway.

No sooner was there a separation from the front County than she returned a Reformer to Parliament in the person of Dr. John Gilchrist. At the next election it is true that a Conservative was elected, but that was owing to the candidate being a very liberal man, a great favorite moreover, and opposed by a perfect stranger without any further recommendation than his being a Reformer.

At the next election when the College Question was before the country a Reformer was returned in preference to a Conservative. In 1852 Mr. Langton came before the Electors pledged to secularize the Clergy Reserves, and he was elected. The pledge given he fulfilled. In 1856 Mr. Conger came out as a Reformer, and though refusing to pledge himself against the Government, a large vote of good men was resorted for him, fearing but hoping he would do right,—that vote was returned in 1858, as it was potent that he was an out-and-out supporter of a corrupt Administration. And now when his chances for re-election were brilliant he is fairly defeated by a candidate, on the simple ground of his adherence to the present Ministry. You may we feel proud of an decided a victory, over the combined influences which were brought to bear in favor of the Ministerial candidate.

THE CHARGE AGAINST THE SHERIFF.

A GROUNDLESS ACCUSATION.

It is one of the most common weaknesses of humanity to attribute discomfiture to something else than the real cause. How many individuals, for example, ascribe the nausea caused by too deep potations to the cakes and other comestibles disagreeing with them. And why, therefore, should not Mr. Conger attribute his recent defeat to what he is pleased to term the illegal interference of the Sheriff in the classic land of Galway? It was useless to deny that, in the circumstances, Mr. Conger's rejection was exceedingly humiliating and mortifying. Both he and his organ, therefore, seek to ignore the true cause of defeat, and make a cowardly attack on the Sheriff who is prevented from defending himself.—Political dishonesty and double dealing, have met with a just reward. Mr. Conger is suffering the bitter consequences; and, like the individuals referred to, who blame the cakes, he, with equal justice, blames the Sheriff. We may safely assert that the strong feeling said to exist against Mr. Hall for his conduct during the contest is confined to the breast of Mr. Conger, the precincts of the Review office, and perhaps a dozen persons besides, with more conceit than wit, who were hunting after government situations and expecting to get them by hanging on to Mr. Conger's skirts.—Nevertheless, in the cause of truth and justice, we shall recall to mind the facts which necessitated the Sheriff's interference; and when these are fairly stated we are satisfied the verdict of all unprejudiced men will be that, whatever illegal interference there was, was by Mr. Conger's partizans, and not by Mr. Hall.

When the Sheriff received the Writ, he had a doubt whether he should use the Roll of '60 or '61, and therefore consulted Mr. Dennistoun and the County Attorney, who both advised that the Rolls of '60 should be taken, as none of the '61 Rolls had been completed before the Writ was received. Mr. Hall then concluded to use the 1860 Rolls. A few days afterwards, the Rolls for '61 for Galway, &c., were sent in in hot haste to the Clerk of the Peace; and as those were considered more favorable to Mr. Conger's interests, the County Attorney changed his opinion, and maintained that the '61 Rolls ought to be used in Galway. "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" Mr. Hall determined to consult Mr. Harrison, considered the best authority in the Province on such points, and abide by his opinion. That was, as our readers are already aware, to the effect that the Rolls of 1860 should be used in this County. The Sheriff of Kingston was also asked and gave his opinion to the same effect, and added that the Attorney General's opinion was the same. This anxiety manifested by the Sheriff to ascertain what the law was, and to carry it out impartially, the Review, with its usual veracity, represents as a hunting after opinions to justify the use of the 1860 Rolls!

In due time the Sheriff procured copies of the proper Rolls, and placed them in the hands of the respective Deputy Returning officers; and sensible and law-abiding men should have been content to use them, and if wrong, hold the Sheriff responsible, and contest the election afterwards, if so inclined. Mr. Conger and some of his party adopted a different course; and, without the shadow of a right to interfere, did most illegally and persistently interfere and tamper with certain of the Deputies, in order to induce them to lay aside the Rolls received from their superior, and take others supposed by them to be more favorable to Mr. Conger. In every case where the Sheriff became aware of such illegal and unwarrantable attempts being made, he, as in duty bound, used his authority to prevent them, and pointed out to his deputies the necessity of performing their functions in accordance with law, and the consequences to which a dereliction of duty would lead. This we maintain (and believe also that the law-abiding and intelligent of Mr. Conger's supporters will admit) was a right and proper and laudable interference in support of law and order; and on the contrary, wherever the conduct of Mr. Conger's partisans, in intermeddling as they did, is discussed, the verdict of sensible men is that it was lawless and rowdy in the extreme, and disgraceful to men who ought to have known better. The Deputies for Ashburnham and Asphodel, who, in the wisdom of their own conceit, and fortified by the voluntary advice of the County Attorney, used the Rolls of '61, were guilty of insubordination and gross dereliction of duty. The Deputy for Galway, we are informed on the best authority, never intended to use any other Roll than that received from his superior, so that the Sheriff's letter to him, about which so much fuss has been made, was not acted on. Unless the Review is prepared to maintain that legal and illegal are convertible terms, depending on the relation they bear to the interest of its candidate, the sooner it backs out of the frivolous charge against the Sheriff, the better for itself. Let it remember that those who live in glass houses should not be first to throw stones. Instead of trying to trump up absurd charges of illegal interference and unbecoming conduct on the part of the Sheriff, we think the Review would have been better employed in preparing its promised analysis of the votes making up Mr Conger's minority,—that "one half of the electors who have been cheated out of their political rights." Why was not that analysis forthcoming? Did our cotemporary, as near impostion, dislike the aspect of the motley crew? Did the seven hundred true and independent (?) Catholic electors, who cursed Mr. Conger, and yet voted for him like sheep, because he was the "chosen of the Hierarchy" for this county, not give the Review the like "aid and comfort" that they gave Mr. Conger? And did it seem that the remaining five hundred, or about one-fifth of the votes polled, were too small to brag about? We are afraid we shall have to give the analysis ourselves, and when we do so it will be seen that in Douro many votes were recorded for Mr Conger, in the absence of the owners and without their consent, and that among other notable facts worthy of everlasting remembrance, no less than three dead men voted for him in that Township! Owing to these circumstances, and the fact that in the back Townships every man was assessed, by an assessor friendly to Mr. Conger, at $200, in order to give him a vote, though in the majority of cases the real value of the property assessed was not half that amount, Col. Haultain's majority was much smaller than, with anything like fair play, it would have been. Asphodel and Ashburnham also gave Mr. Conger considerably larger majorities by the illegal use of the 1861 Rolls, than would have been the case had the proper Rolls been used.

In conclusion, we beg to call the attention of those who affect to say that the 1861 Rolls should have been used in this County, to the fact that almost in every case where, under similar circumstances, these Rolls have been used in Upper Canada, the elections have been protested against, and will be contested on that ground with every prospect of success. We therefore predict that Col. Haultain will keep his seat till next general election; and also that, notwithstanding the dire threats of vengeance against him, Sheriff Hall will keep his place until some thing more tangible can be brought against him than the present bogus cry of "illegal interference."

RELIEF FOR LINDSAY.

It is well known that a most disastrous fire has visited our sister Town, and laid in ashes the dwellings and business places of many of her inhabitants. In that unfortunate occurrence many have lost fortunes, others have been left in poverty,—all have suffered severely. In this, the hour of their affliction, they call for aid, and who should be more forward to extend a helping hand than her neighbors, the people of Peterborough. Little do we know but that a similar misfortune may overtake us at another time, and we would then feel the advantage of friendly assistance. It is the duty of our citizens to devise some means whereby we may be able to aid the sufferers, and we hope no time will be lost in taking steps for that purpose. We would suggest that our Town Council take the matter in hand, and we are certain that the ratepayers would sustain them in any measure of relief they may agree upon.

LOVELL'S GENERAL GEOGRAPHY.—This excellent work has been on our table for four or five weeks, and in the bustle of the election had almost escaped our notice. The General Geography is intended as one of Mr. Lovell's series of School Books, the Grammar and Arithmetic of which have been already noticed by us. We can at once pronounce the Geography the most correct,—certainly the best adapted for School use,—we have ever seen; and we hope soon to see it on every School desk in the country. In Lovell's edition, Canada has the prominence she deserves, which will have the desirable effect of at least teaching our youth to regard their country as something more than an unimportant strip of land fringing the northern borders of the "Great Republic." Mr. Lovell deserves the sincerest thanks of the Canadian public for his enterprise in supplying us with a reliable series of books for our Schools. The General Geography may be ordered at the publisher's office, in Montreal, by wholesale; sold retail at Mercies' Bookstore, in Peterborough.

☞ The Hamilton Herald, in its list of Members returned puts down Dunsford, of Victoria, and Haultain, of Peterborough, as "Independent" members. That is the way the Ministerial papers make out a loss to the Opposition at the late elections.

WELL DONE FOR THE OLD DISTRICT.

When we gave as our opinion, a few weeks ago, that every riding in the old district would return a member pledged to oppose the Government, we did so with a conviction that the result in our county would have a great effect upon the neighbouring constituencies. That anticipation has fully been realized. In every one of the six constituencies, the battle has been fiercely fought, the enemy has strained every nerve to retain their strongholds and win ours, but in every case they have been defeated, and now from the Trent to the Doe, and from Ontario to Scugog and the Madawaska there is no rest for the sole of the Ministerial foot, not an acre that they can claim as their own. So clean a sweep of this immense tract of country was never made before. We know not what may be the issue when Parliament meets, though we believe that the Ministry will be defeated, but whatever may be the result, the people of Northumberland, Durham, Peterborough and Victoria, will not be held responsible for the continued reign of corruption. They have spoken in a manner that cannot be misunderstood. They have wiped the dust off their skirts, and if they have done it in vain, they have the consolation of knowing that it is not their fault that the Ministry are continued in power, that they at all events have done their duty.

We subjoin the result in each of the six constituencies referred to above:

E. Northumberland,	Biggar 1,236,	Meyers 971
W. do,	Cockburn 1,183,	Smith 1,156
East Durham,	Smith 1,185,	Barton 1,160
W. do.,	Munro 1,004,	Wilmot 1,744
Peterboro',	Haultain 1,402,	Conger 1,260
Victoria,	Dunsford 1,861,	Cameron 1,110
	7,950	6,942
	6,942
Opposition Majority....	1,008

If we substract from the Ministerial vote those who were obtained by undue influence, the majority would be larger,—more than double. Hurrah for the Old District. Hurrah for Cockburn, Biggar, Shenston Smith, Munro, Dunsford and Haultain. Hoora!—Cobourg Star.

"ILLEGAL INTERFERENCE."

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—The oracle of the Review has just solemnly spoken upon sundry matters in connection with the late election in our county. If you will allow me, I will endeavor to exhibit to the public another side of the picture represented by the Review, and to show that the editor has delivered himself merely as a violently prejudiced political partizan, looking at the late events through a pair of very dark-coloured Conger spectacles, and seeking rather to give vent to the spiteful feelings consequent upon defeat, disappointment and mortification, than to act the part of a fair and impartial public journalist.

We have, first, the leading editorial, which charges our present Sheriff with the grossest abuse of his office as Returning Officer for this county, and attributes Col. Haultain's return to his (the Sheriff's) improper and illegal interference in the late election.

Now to meet these charges: and here it is most important to call to mind the fact that during the election contest, the ground taken by the Review and Mr. Conger's friends was, that the Lists of 1861 when received before the Nomination were the proper ones for the Deputy Returning Officers to use, and the cry against the Sheriff then was, that, out of hostility to Mr. Conger, and contrary to what he had every reason to suppose was proper and legal, he was recklessly endeavoring to enforce the use of the lists of 1860.

But how have things changed since then? It has since turned out that the Sheriff was perfectly correct in the position which he took as to the lists of voters, and in instructing his Deputies through the County to use the lists of 1860—and this, notwithstanding Mr. Atty. Gen. Macdonald's opinion (as the Review says) to the contrary. We do not hear a whisper now from Mr Review to the effect that the lists of 1861 were the proper ones. The ground he now takes is that our Sheriff, having had (as the Review asserts, but which there is reason to doubt) an opinion from our county Attorney that the lists of 1861 were the ones he ought to use, and also advice to the same effect from Mr. Sheriff Fortune, and from Mr. Attorney General Macdonald—though it does not at all appear that the Attorney General ever gave any opinion on the subject, but merely, in order to assist in procuring the return of his man, telegraphed to the Returning Officer in Ashburnham to use the 1861 list — that our Sheriff I say should have been quite satisfied with the advice so disinterestedly tendered, and have used the lists of 1861 accordingly—and that, forsooth, because he was, naturally, very desirous to be safe and right on so momentous a point, he is to be set down as guilty of an "undue desire to use the lists of 1860."

The Leader, the organ of the Attorney General, says in its issue of the 22nd inst.:

"We have already stated on high legal authority" (which no doubts alludes to the Attorney General himself,) "that the use of the Lists of 1861, having been contrary to law" (I Italicise these words) "invalidates the return of members for constituencies in which they were adopted."

Now, sir, if this dictum be correct, which in fact it is, our Sheriff is of course fully sustained in the course he took in returning to the lists of 1860—and, inasmuch as this dictum comes from the Attorney General's own organ, and from "high legal authority," I are a staff of officials, all of them appointed by the Returning Officer on their head, and receiving all their authority from commission from him. Then, if we consider that the Deputies are persons living here and there at isolated points over the county and that they are not, to say the least, in every case men of sufficient knowledge or experience thoroughly to understand the election law of the Province, and to carry it out without advice and assistance, more especially in an election like the last one when there was a serious dispute between the candidates as to one of the most important of their duties, I think one would be fully warranted in coming to the conclusion that the Returning Officer is the person to guide and direct them, and that they ought to be directed by him. And then if we suppose the case of underhand influence being brought to bear upon a Deputy to induce him to use a wrong list for a corrupt purpose, I think the Returning Officer would be bound to use his influence to frustrate such an attempt.

I had intended to have taken up other matters in the last Review but have to leave them over till your next issue.

Yours, &c.,
AN ELECTOR.

THE PARISH SCHOOLS OF SCOTLAND.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—Permit me through your columns to set right an erroneous impression that may be given by an article in the Journal of Education regarding the Parish Schools in Scotland. It is admitted that the Parish Schools are upon the whole the best in Scotland. The reason is that they rest upon a solid foundation. "A Laird" may cultivate his land, it is his own, and whatever improvement he may make is still his own. A tenant with a lease of 19 or 21 years, may improve his farm in the first part of that term, but he requires to be bound by special contract to leave his farm in good order. While a yearly tenant he cannot be expected to make improvements unless his landlord's private character is as good as a lease for his lifetime. The Parish School like the British Government rests upon a hereditary basis of Heritors, that is, proprietors of the first class, who, as a consequence are all educated men, as well educated nearly as the Minister of the Parish who is chairman, without a vote, excepting in case of a tye, and very commonly the examiner for the rest. Their number is necessarily small. They have a local and public character to sustain, being very commonly the magistrates, the members of Parliament, the judges—the most eminent men in the Parish, county and kingdom. True, they are seldom present, personally, excepting two or three of them, but they must be consulted. Some will say, what a "to-do" about a paltry school-master! So let the ignorant continue to think. But our fathers in Scotland thought otherwise — and when the great lords of the kingdom were the most humble and zealous elders in the church, they did not despise the little ones as men do now-a-days—thinking they treat their children well, when they are considered as next after their horses and their cattle, and when they pay their teacher as much nearly as a common ploughman, and treat him with nearly as much consideration. True the Parish School-master (the Minister is the Parish Teacher) is not paid as he ought to be, one third part of the Minister's stipend, as he was then, nor is the Minister paid equal to the most of the Heritors as he was then. Covetous men grudge to give what belongs to men, who are restrained by feelings of delicacy from fighting their own battle for a living. But the Parish School-master equally with the Parish Minister rests when once elected on a solid basis, which on the one hand renders the election a matter of importance and caution, and on the other hand, when elected, gives the person appointed such a firm hold that public opinion may be brought to bear upon him with safety—like an oak deeply rooted, only strengthened by the agitations of the tempest. This is the glory alike of the British Constitution, and of the Scottish Parish School. It can bear to modify itself to the wants and wishes of the people without danger when cautiously acted upon; and not like the United States constitution, and the Canadian Teacher, be overturned at the first movement of the popular caprice, like a pine in the light sandy soil overturned by the first breath of wind. Nothing will bear a fine polish which is not solid and stable; oak will, pine will not; granite will, sandstone will not; and so in the Scottish School-master very often a man of the highest talent, the greatest learning, the most honorable character, and the most gentlemanly bearing, not inferior as a man to any man in the Parish; and were he paid and esteemed as he is in Aberdeenshire, where his salary is about £120 stg., besides fees to the extent of £100 or more, the produce of his own direct labor, the masters generally would be as they are there, masters of arts, and doctors in learning, in their attainments, as in their office.—But a Canadian teacher, whose scanty education and scanty allowance, and above all whose precarious appointment deprives him of the means of being honored by the parents, never can substantially benefit the children. And since as in the teacher so in the School, here is one thing to be needed before any real improvement can be made in our Schools so as to bring them within a comparison with the Parish Schools of Scotland.

I have on exceeded my intended limits that I feel constrained to reserve any further remarks, with your permission, to a future opportunity—and subscribe myself at present,

Yours, very truly,
AN OLD PAROCHIAL SCHOOL-MASTER OF SCOTLAND.

Peterboro, July 22, 1861.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—I noticed in your last issue a communication signed "A Norwegian," about the celebration of the 12th of July in Warsaw, in which two things are misrepresented. First, in giving the names of the different speakers that of S. C. Wilson is given in place of Francis Crow, Esq. Second, that while our worthy District Master, Charles Parker, Esq., was addressing the friends on that occasion he referred no forcibly to the late election, and in abuse of Col. Haultain, that his audience became riotous, which was utterly false, as he did not in one instance refer to the election, nor to any one of the candidates; and in my own hearing requested one of the other speakers not to say a word about the late election, as it might hurt the feelings of some present. So my advice to the "Norwegian," whoever he may be, is to state the truth on all such matters when there is so many living witnesses to testify to the truth of what I write.

Yours, with respect,
D. G. ANDERSON.

The American Revolution.

A Great Battle.

LOSS HEAVY ON BOTH SIDES.

Washington, July 18.

The Herald's correspondence writes from the camp of the First Division of the Grand Army, stating that that wing, numbering about 16,000, halted last night within four and a half miles of Centerville.

The fact is established that their force at Fairfax Court House was composed of their crack regiments. The retreat of these men without showing fight, will demoralize the whole force at Manassas Junction.

Colonel Stribble, of the 1st Connecticut skirmishers, captured a straggling rebel baggage wagon, which was filled with stores, arms, &c. A broken down waggon, loaded with flour, was also found.

The grounds of two rebel encampments were passed, both of which had apparently been but a short time abandoned.

A signal dispatch from Mr. Beauregard to General Cooke, commanding the rebels at Germantown, was found by a Confederate officer. He instructed him to keep a particularly careful look-out on Tuesday evening, thereby showing that some traitors in Washington apprised the rebels of the time of advance of the grand army. In the course of last evening a lively exchange of musket shots took place between the Union and rebel pickets. The general orders which were found at Brigadier-General Bonam's office, was one that revealed the fact that the rebels were on a short allowance of forage.

Late this afternoon a General arrived direct from Richmond, by way of Manassas Junction. He left Manassas Junction last night. He had no difficulty in passing through the rebel lines, but was three times arrested within those of the Union troops. He reports that there were at Manassas Junction last night only 12,000 men. Their means of defence were elaborately prepared, but it is his opinion that they will not withstand an assault from our advancing columns. There were also at the Junction 150 railroad cars.

On Sunday night Gen. Beauregard went to Richmond, and the command in chief at the Junction devolved on Gen. Cranshaw, second in command. At Richmond there was a military consultation as to what course should be pursued. It was after this conference that the immense train of cars was sent to the Junction. This is a significant fact—it is an evident preparation for a retreat, and in all probability that will be made with as much haste as was manifested in the evacuation of Fairfax. It is the opinion of our informant that the rebel army will leave Manassas Junction and take their first great stand at Richmond. They have there already mounted 70 cannon of a large calibre, and there are some 10,000 whites and negroes at work both day and night on the defences.

The Tribune dispatch says, General Tyler's column which had passed the night a mile or so beyond Fairfax station, at and near Germantown, which consists of half a dozen houses or so, moved at 4 o'clock this morning. The head of the column passed through Centerville without firing a gun and halted in the woods a mile or two beyond. Arrington's party, consisting of Crpt. Alexander, two composed of cavalry, and a portion of a battery accompanied by General Tyler and staff went out a little after 12 o'clock; they took up a position on a hill two or three miles from Centreville, and half a mile from a creek called Bull's Run, which commands the valley of the creek and the hills beyond. For some distance, both from the heavy guns exploded on the right until 25 cavalry emerged, who cheered and scattered six or eight rounds, were brought against them from a concealed battery, which wounded Sergeant Rohan, company G., 2nd cavalry. A cannon ball broke his carbine and sabre, and made a deep flesh wound in both his legs. Two of Benjamin's heavy guns were brought into action, and soon silenced the rebel battery. Colonel Richardson's brigade, consisting of the 12th New York volunteers, 1st Massachusetts, and and 3rd Michigan regiments, supported by the cavalry, and a battery, was next sent out to skirmish along the creek. They soon succeeded in waking up the rebel batteries on the other side, which were followed by a heavy fire of musketry which was returned by our men with zeal for half an hour, the boom of artillery and the rattle of small arms from both sides of the creek followed each other fast. In the opinion of officers who witnessed the engagement, their platoon firing was remarkably regular and effective, and their guns were served with great precision, they were twice reinforced and occupying a very strong position behind entrenchments on a wooded slope covered by a creek, were too much for the small force opposed to that which was not in the judgment of military men more than a fourth of their number. Our men, who were drawn up in a line along the creek, with the horses of the dismounted cavalry behind them, fell back somewhat, but in good order and fighting bravely.

The rebels, whose flag floated from a mill cheered lustily. At this moment a shell from the new battery to the left, hitherto silent and unknown, burst on the top of the hill where our first battery had been stationed and where there were a number of civilians. Several casualties occurred, but no one was mortally wounded.

Two gentlemen were thrown off their horses, but one only slightly injured. Rev. Mr. Way, chaplain of the Michigan regiment, who was also on the spot, fell to the ground: but was found to be unhurt. General Tyler occupied a position on the left. This shell was followed by several others. Several were wounded, among them Lieut. Lorraine, who was shot in the foot, and two other wounded men had been brought to the rear in the ambulance, but were luckily not struck.

All on the Hill, both civil and military men, deemed i prudent to withdraw; but the pioneers, who were waiting on the higher slope, had previously broken down the fences, so that they could have full range, if necessary, to cover their retreat. They were waiting there still when our correspondent left, in order to cross the bridge at 9 o'clock. About half way to that place reinforcements were met, consisting of Col. Sherman's Brigade, 13th New York, 69th New York, 2d Wisconsin, and 79th New York.

The wife of Col. Richardson was in a carriage in the woods only a short distance from the scene of the conflict, giving welcome water to passing soldiers, and patiently waiting news from her husband.

Centreville, Va., July 18.

The first engagement of any character in Eastern Virginia during this campaign took place at Bull's Run, 6 miles south of Centreville, this p. m.

Gen. Tyler's division encamped last evening a few miles east of Centerville and this morning proceeded towards that point.—Centerville was passed in safety and the troops turned from the Little River turnpike road to the Manassas road. On the road information was received that a masked battery was on the left of the road ahead, and Col. Richardson in command of the 6th Brigade was ordered to reconnoitre while the remainder of the division remained in the vicinity of Centerville. Col. Richardson proceeded with three companies of the Massachusetts 1st Regiment, being the Chelsea Company of fusileers and the National Guard. They passed a cross and open ravine and again entered the road which was densely surrounded by woods when they were received by a raking fire from the rebels, killing a number of the advance which gallantly sustained their position and covered the retreat of a brass cannon of Sherman's battery. The horse were completely disabled by the flight until relieved by the Michigan 2nd and New York 22nd, when they fell back. The Federal forces then took a position on the top of a hill; two field cannon were planted in front supported by Capt. Brackett's Co. D, 2nd cavalry, with a line of infantry composed of the 2nd regiment of Michigan and the 12th regiment of New York in the rear. A steady fire was kept up on both sides in this position. The rebels had two batteries of 8 pieces, in a position commanding the road; they used their guns very well, except that they sometimes aimed too high, but they were gallantly faced by our troops. They did not reply to our return fire for half an hour, during which time they were receiving large reinforcements. In the meantime, Col. Richardson's brigade reconnoitered the woods, and while we were again thus advancing we were met with a raking fire. Our guns were again in position and we poured grape and canister among the enemy till the supply was exhausted. Capt Ayres of the Artillery, lost one man killed and three wounded, and several of his pieces were disabled.

Washington, July 19.

A special dispatch to the Herald says it is reported that Ellsworth's Zouaves stormed the battery at Bull's Run last evening; it is doubtless untrue. Loss on our side stated to be 150 killed and wounded.

A telegraphic dispatch was received at the War Department at 11, a. m., to-day, stating that the fighting was still going on at Bull's Run, three miles from Manassas Junction.

A special despatch to the Commercial says that information has been received at the War Department that the rebel battery at Bull's Run has been taken by our troops. The particulars have not yet transpired.

The body of Gen. Garnett has arrived in this city, where it will remain for a while, the further progress of the party accompanying it under a flag of truce being necessarily delayed on account of the stirriring events at the South.

A special despatch to the Post received here from Richmond, states that Governor Letcher has called out nearly all the Militia force of Virginia, in order to give battle to the Federal army.

The negroes in Richmond had been set at work to fortify the city.

The papers from North Carolina report that a federal war vessel, carrying 44 guns had made an attack upon Fort Hatteras, but with no effective result.

Wagon trains from this city are busily engaged night and day in carrying provisions to our advancing army in Virginia.

Vice-President Hamlin left the city this morning, accompanied by the California delegation, who brought a flag for the 1st Maine regiment. The presentation is to be made at Centreville.

Mr. Patton, and other members of Congress, left the city for Manassas Junction at daylight this mo ning.

A gentleman just from Centreville, at 6 o'clock this morning, reports that all was quiet during the nigh., and that no movement was anticipated to-day, and that the only alarm during the night was by the firing of the picket guard.

It is ascertained that about 30 of our troops were killed and wounded during yesterday's engagement at Bull's Run. The rebels are still in possession of the batteries and it is expected that they will make a stand at that point.

Col. Wilcox's brigade arrived at Centreville from Fairfax station last night.

The Federal forces lie over to-day to reconnoitre, and it is expected that they will attack the batteries again to-morrow.

A negro from the Secessionists' camp reports, his master, Col. Fontain, as killed, together with a large number of rebels.—This statement is corroborated by a number of the 1st Massachusetts regiment who were in the engagement.

The grand advance, Col. McClernand, of the House of Representatives, left head quarters at Centreville at 9 o'clock a. m., bringing the official report of the battle at Bull's Run. He arrived here this afternoon.

Last night, after the firing ceased, Gen. Schenck's brigade proceeded up the Gainsville road to flank the position of the three more prominent batteries which had opened on our troops.

The Confederates who fought the Federals at the Run are, it is said, those who were driven back at various places between Fairfax Court House and Centreville, in addition to a reinforcement of five regiments who were brought up from Manassas during the action.

In spite of the various rumours the condition of affairs at the close of yesterday may be characterised as a drawn battle, there being no decided result, the Confederates no where showing themselves during the battle; they being altogether concealed by the woods, ravines, and entrenchments, from which they directed their fires.

New York, July 19.

A special Washington dispatch to the Tribune says that the Secretary of War says there are no more than 50 killed and wounded. Among them 5 captains, 6 lieutenants.

Another source reports the works carried by the Zouaves with the Massachusetts 5th moving on the flank.

There is no doubt that the enemy are now falling back greatly, and the rumour that Manassas is occupied is perhaps only a little premature.

A special despatch to the Herald says that there is no truth in the report that there is a battle going on at Bull's Run to-day.

An official despatch to Gen. Scott says The enemy has made no new movement yet, nor likely to before to-morrow.

A special despatch to the Post says:—The official report states that 12 of our men were killed and 40 wounded yesterday.—It is thought that there more of our men killed and wounded in the woods, near the creek. The rebel loss was supposed to be a heavy loss. A South Carolinian Colonel was killed.

San Francisco, July 18.

The first overland mail coach started from Placerville on the 1st, escorted out of town by an immense concourse of citizens, and bands of music and cannon firing. The coach and horses were decorated with American flags. There were six bags of letter mail and 23 of newspaper, in all weighing 1,776 lbs. Business is suspended throughout the State to-day, and our national anniversary receives the homage of a people devoted to the Union. There never was such a display of flags and so many manifestations at any previous day. Nearly all the churches of San Francisco have run up the Stars and Stripes during the week, to remain up till the war is ended.

LATEST.

Washington, July 22, via Philadelphia.

Our troops after taking three batteries, and gaining a great victory were eventually repulsed and commenced a retreat to Washington.

The retreat is in good order with the rear well covered by a good column.

Our loss is from 2,500 to 3,000.

After the latest information was received from Centreville at 7½ o'clock last night, a series of events took place in the intensest degree disastrous. Many confused statements are prevalent, but enough is known to warrant the statement that we have suffered in a degree which has cast a gloom over the remnants of the army, and excited the deepest melancholy throughout Washington.

The carnage is tremendously heavy on both sides, and on ours it is represented as frightful. We were advancing and taking their masked batteries gradually but surely and by driving the enemy towards Manassas Junction, when the enemy seemed to have been reinforced by Gen. Johnston, who it is understood, took command, and immediately commenced driving us back, when a panic among our troops suddenly occurred and a regular stampede took place. It is thought that General McDowell undertook to make a stand at or about Centreville, but the panic was so fearful that the whole army became demoralized and it was impossible to check them even at Centreville or at Fairfax Court House.

Beyond Fairfax Court House the retreat was kept up until the men reached their regular encampment, a portion of whom retired to them, but a still larger portion coming inside the intrenchments.

A large number of the troops in their retreat fell on the wayside from exhaustion and scattered along the route all the way from Fairfax Court House.

The roads from Bull Run were strewn with knapsacks, arms, &c.

Some of our troops deliberately threw away their guns and appurtenances the better to facilitate their retreat.

According to the statement of two Fire Zouaves they only had 200 left from the slaughter, while the 69th and other regiments frightfully suffered in killed and wounded.

The city this morning is in the most intense excitement. Groups are everywhere gathering inquiring the latest news.

Wagons are continually arriving bringing in the dead and wounded.

Soldiers are relating to greedy listeners the deplorable events of last night and early this morning.

The feeling is awfully distressing. Both telegraph and steamboat communication with Alexandria is suspended to-day to the public.

ESSAY ON AGRICULTURE.

BY GEORGE RESON, OF CLONAGH, C. W.

PART XVIII.

The present seems a good time to say a few words about Turnip culture. Although from different circumstances it is not probable that this crop will ever attain the same importance in this country that has for many years been attached to it in Britain, yet its cultivation has greatly extended the last few years, and there is no doubt it might still be increased ten fold with profit. I have said that it can hardly ever become of as much importance in this country as in Britain, and I am led to this conclusion mainly from the fact that there it is held as a substitute for bare fallow, and is always the first crop in the rotation. The best culture is bestowed on it in order not only to secure a heavy crop, but that its influences may continue through the rotation. "Insure me a good crop of Turnips," says the English farmer, "and I will insure you good crops through the rest of the rotation." But in this country the Turnip can never take the place of the fallow so long as Fall Wheat continues our great staple, from the fact that Fall Wheat can not be sown after Turnips. Another drawback to its extensive cultivation is the dearness of labour. In Britain, especially Scotland, Turnip cultivation is mostly performed by women, whose wages does not exceed $6 or $7 a month; and they will perform more work and in a superior manner to our hired men who receive $22 to $26 per month. The severity of our winter also causes more labour and risk in storing the crop, thereby increasing its cost. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks, there is no doubt that the Turnip might be cultivated to a much greater extent than at present, with profit to the farmer; and that during our long winters, when stock are much confined on dry food, its increased consumption would add to their health and growth.

Perhaps none of our cultivated crops so forcibly illustrates the effects of good cultivation as the Turnip in its wild state. It is a native of the south of England and of Holland, and is a small insignificant weed with scarcely any roots, whereas by good and careful cultivation its size and quality have been so much improved that it has now not unfrequently produced 20 lbs. and upwards.

In order to obtain the best possible crop of Turnips, the land must not only be of a suitable description, but must be thoroughly cultivated and highly manured. The best soil is deep rich loam; but Turnips will grow on any dry soil if properly managed. The first necessary operation is to plough deeply—if in the previous autumn, so much the better. The manure may be either applied at this time or in the ridges. If in the Fall, it will require a larger supply, because it must then be mixed through all the soil; but when applied in the drill it is placed directly under the roots of the Turnip, and a smaller quantity will answer the purpose. However, I prefer Fall manuring, when practicable; for, should a dry season occur, the manure is apt to become dry under the Turnips, and a failure in the consequence. As soon as the ground is sufficiently dry in Spring, it should be well harrowed and again ploughed, and this operation should be repeated until the land is reduced to a fine tilth. If the manure is to be applied in the drills, it will require to be drilled twice; that is, the drills will have to be opened and the manure spread in them, and the drills ploughed backed again. If no manure is to be applied, once drilling will be sufficient. The drills are made by ploughing two furrows together, and should not be less than 2 feet wide. I know this will be considered by many a waste of land, but I contend that in this country where land is cheap and labour dear, it is better economy to save labour than to save land, and I think that 100 bushels of Turnips can be raised with less labour at three feet between drills and 16 inches apart in the drill, than at any less distance. It is urged by some, and particularly Old Country farmers, that the Turnips should be just close enough to touch each other when full grown. I have seen some very good crops of Turnips raised in this way, but I do not recollect to have seen a Turnip 20 lbs in weight growing with another Turnip touching it on each side. The larger we can get the roots to grow, the less labour in cultivating and harvesting them; and this can only be accomplished by giving them plenty of room.

WATCH THE CUCUMBER AND MELON VINES.

That vexatious pest, the striped bug, though usually most destructive to vines in June, while the growth is tender, is still active, and must be looked after. Several broods of these insects hatch out during the Summer, and their ravages continue until the end of the season. The best remedy we have found, is a brood of young chickens. Confine the parent hen in a movable coop near the vines, and insects will soon be scarce. Or if these cannot be had, visit the garden very early in the morning, before the insects are fairly awake, and take them with the thumb and finger.

Do not let the vines have it all their own way in growing, or they may forget fruiting. When they have grown three to five feet, according to their natural habit, nip off the ends and thus reserve the strength for completing the fruit already started. It will also be well later in the season to remove all specimens that have started late, and which cannot come to maturity before frost. The remaining fruit will be finer. In the case of musk-melons, the unripened fruit will come into use for pickling.

Cucumbers for pickling should be gathered as fast as they grow to the proper size. If left until they begin to ripen, the flavor and firmness of the pickles will be injured, and there will also be a feebler growth of the better fruit.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the
"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"
have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x38 inches, entitled,

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further information send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tuscon, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and disordered. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but rejuvenate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Bad Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and hinders all the foods and nourishment pure and fluent, clearing and rejuvenating the vital organs.

Prominent indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints,	Debility,	Inward Weakness,
Coughs,	Fever and Ague,	Liver Complaints,
Colds,	Female Complaints,	Dizziness of Spirits,
Chill Disease	Headaches,	Piles,
Costiveness,	Indigestion,	Sour and Crude
Dysentery,	Inflammation,	Stomach Spring
Diarrhœa,	Jaundice,	Worms,
Dropsy,

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, promote the color of all pimples and blotches, and bring that rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tennessee, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great discovery" of the Indians.

Observe.—The "Mountain Herb Pills" are put up in a Quarter-fold Wrapper. Each box contains 50 pills, and sells at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the signature of E. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, SALT-RHEUM, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which foster in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the markets, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be adopted for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations, or they make more profit. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The above Remedies are for sale by

Health and its Pleasures,

OR DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

GOOD NIGHT, MY CHILD.

Good night, my child!—good night!
May angels bright,
With golden wings outspread,
Surround thy bed,
And gently seal thy closed eyes
Till morn arise,
With all its sweet refreshing beams of light.
Good night, my child!—good night!

Good night, my child!—good night!
May he whose sight
Extends from pole to pole,
Watch o'er thy soul,
And keep thee guiltless all thy days
From evil ways,
And learn to walk His holy ways upright.
Good night, my child!—good night!

Good night, my child!—good night!
Let thy delight
Be in the constant love
Of Him above;
And always, in thy daily prayer,
Implore Him there,
That he would still uphold thee in His might.
Good night, my child!—good night!

THE RETREAT FROM BULL'S RUN.

A GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION.

The correspondent of the New York World gives a very intelligible account of the battle. The Southerners appear to have retreated in a semi-circle, the Unionists being close upon their heels. They had followed a considerable distance when an attack was made upon their left rear by a large force of Confederates which had been concealed near the spot where the first battery had been taken in the morning. Hence the panic. The correspondent says:—

"At this time, near 4 o'clock, I rode forward through the open plain to the creek where the abattis was being assailed by our engineers. The Ohio, Connecticut and Minnesota regiments were variously posted thereabout; others were in distant portions of the field; all were completely exhausted and partially dissevered; no General of division, except Tyler, could be found.—Where were our officers? Where was our foe? Who knew whether we had won or lost? The question was quickly to be decided for us. A sudden swoop, and a body of cavalry rushed down upon our columns near the bridge. They come from the woods on the left and infantry poured out behind them. Tyler and his staff, with the reserve, were apparently cut off by the quick manœuvre. I succeeded in gaining the position I had just left, and there witnessed the capture of Carlisle's battery on the plain, and saw another force of cavalry and infantry pouring into the road at the very spot where the battle commenced, and near which the Southern Carolinians who manned the battery silenced in the morning, had doubtless been all day lying concealed. The ambulances and wagons had gradually advanced to this spot and of course instantaneous confusion and dismay resulted. Our own infantry broke ranks in the field, plunged into the woods to avoid the road, and got up the hill as best they could, without leaders, every man saving himself in his own way. By the time I reached the top of the hill, the retreat, the panic, the hideous headlong confusion, were now beyond a hope. I was near the rear of the movement, with the brave Capt. Alexander, who endeavoured by the most gallant but unavailable exertions to check the onward tumult. It was difficult to believe in the reality of our sudden reverse. 'What does it all mean?' I asked Alexander. 'It means defeat,' was his reply. 'We are beaten; it is a shameful, a cowardly retreat! Hold up, men!' he shouted, 'don't be such infernal cowards!' and he rode backwards and forwards, placing his horse across the road, and vainly trying to rally the running troops. The teams and waggons confused and dismembered every corps. We were now cut off from the advanced body by the enemy's infantry, who had rushed on the slope just left by us, surrounded the guns and sutlers' wagons, and were apparently pressing up against us.—'It's no use Alexander,' I said, 'you must leave with the rest.' 'I'll be d—d if I will,' was his sullen reply, and the splendid fellow rode back to make his way as best he could. Meantime I saw officers with leaves and eagles on their shoulder straps, majors and colonels, who had deserted their commands, pass me galloping as if for dear life. No enemy pursued just then; but I suppose all were afraid that his guns would be turned down the long, narrow avenue and mow the retreating thousands, and batter to pieces, army, wagons, and everything else which crowded it. Only one field officer, so far as my observation extended, seemed to have remembered his duty.—Lieut. Col. Speidel, a foreigner attached to a Connecticut regiment, strove against the current for a league. I positively declare that, with the two exceptions mentioned, all efforts made to check the panic before Centreville was reached, were confined to civilians. I saw a man in citizens dress who had thrown off his coat, seized a musket, and was trying to rally the soldiers who came by at the point of the bayonet. In reply to a request for his name, he said it was Washburne, and I learned that he was the member by that name from Illinois.—The Hon. Mr. Kellogg made a similar effort. Both these Congressmen bravely stood their ground till the last moment, and were serviceable at Centreville in assisting the halt there ultimately made. And other civilians did what they could. But what a scene! and how terrific the onset of that tumultuous retreat. For three miles hosts of Federal troops—all detached from their regiments, all mingled in one disorderly rout—were flowing along the road, but mostly through the lots on either side.—Army waggons, sutlers' teams and private carriages, checked the passage, tumbling against each other, amid clouds of dust, and sickening sights and sounds. Hacks, containing unlucky spectators of the late affray were smashed like glass, and the occupants were lost sight of in the debris. Horses flying wildly from the battle field, many of them in death agony, galloped at random forward, joining in the stampede. Those on foot who could catch them rode them bare-back, as much to save themselves from being run over, as to make quicker time. Wounded men, lying along the banks—the few either left on the field nor taken to the captured hospitals, appealed with raised hands to those who rode horses begging to be lifted behind, but few regarded such petitions. Then the artillery, such as was saved, came thundering along, smashing and overpowering everything. The regular cavalry, I record it to their shame, joined in the melee, adding to its terrors, for they rode down to men without mercy. One of the great guns was overturned, and lay amid the ruins of a caisson, as I passed it. I saw an artillery-man running between the ponderous fore and after-wheels of his gun carriage, hanging on with both hands, and vainly striving to jump upon the ordnance. The drivers were spurring the horses; he could not cling much longer, and a more agonized expression never fixed the features of a drowning man. The carriage bounded from the roughness of a steep hill leading to a creek, he lost his hold, fell, and in an instant the great wheels had crushed the life out of him. Who ever saw such a flight? Could the retreat at Borodino have exceeded it in confusion and tumult? I think not. It did not slack in the least until Centreville was reached. There the sight of the reserve—Mill's Brigade—formed in order on the hill, seemed somewhat to re-assure the van. But still the teams and foot soldiers pushed on, passing their own camps and heading swiftly for the distant Potomac, until for ten miles the road over which the grand army had so lately passed southward, gay with unstained banners, and flushed with surety of strength, was covered with the fragments of its retreating forces, shattered and panic-stricken in a single day. From the branch house the trains attached to Hunter's Division had caught the contagion of the fight, and poured into its already swollen current another element of confusion and dismay. Who ever saw a more shameful abandonment of munitions gathered at such a vast expense? The teamsters, many of them, cut the traces, and galloped from the wagons. Others threw out their loads to accelerate their flight, and grain, picks and shovels, and provisions of every kind lay trampled in the dust for leagues. Thousands of muskets strewed the route; when some of us succeeded in rallying a body of fugitives, and forming them into a line across the road, hardly one but had thrown away his arms. If the enemy had brought up his artillery and served it upon the retreating train, or had intercepted our progress with 500 of his cavalry, he might have captured enough supplies for a weeks feast of thanksgiving. As it was enough was left behind to tell the story of the panic. The route of the Federal army seemed complete."

RUSSELL OF THE "TIMES," IN THE STAMPEDE.

Mr. Raymond of the New York Times says:—

"After I had driven something over a mile from the village on my way to Washington, the crowd in the rear became absolutely frienzied with fear, and an immensed mass of waggons, horses, men on foot and flying soldiers, came dashing down the hill at a rate which threatened destruction, instant and complete, to everything in their way. The panic spread as they proceeded, and gathering strength by its progress, the movement became absolutely terrific. The horses caught the frenzy of the moment, and became as wild as their masters. My driver attempted to check the speed of our carriage, found it suddenly crushed under the weight of an enormous Pennsylvania army wagon which crushed it like an egg shell. The opportune arrival of another carriage containing a couple of Congressmen, relieved me from the dilemma, and took me to Washington. Previous to my mishap I was overtaken and passed by a solitary horseman, who proved to be Mr Russell of the London Times, who was profoundly disgusted with this movement, and was making all possible haste he could to get out of it."

A CHARGE OF REBEL CAVALRY.

About 4½ o'clock in the afternoon a terrific dash of cavalry and a fierce charge of artillery was made at our exhausted troops. This charge done the most devastating damage, mowing down everything in its furious career. The agonized shrieks of the wounded, the terrible roar of artillery, snorting of frightened animals tended to strike terror into the hearts of the soldiers. In this charge, Griffin's, Ricket's and the Rhode Island batteries were taken. Those in citizen's dress became alarmed and took to their heels, taking whatever conveyance that they could lay their hands upon.—From them the teamsters, some 500, who had driven their wagons further in advance than there was any necessity for, took fright. The road being very narrow, in fact a gorge, the ponderous vehicles could not be turned, and in many cases the cowardly drivers cut the traces, mounted their steeds and rode off, leaving the valuables which were entrusted to their care by the Government to take care of itself. Thus thousands of dollars worth of provisions were left behind. The army wagons, dashing down the road, spread the panic among the citizens who made all possible haste to leave so hot a neighborhood.

SOME OF THE INCIDENTS.

During the battle a great many interesting scenes occurred. Colonel Codwin, of the 1st Massachusetts regiment was leaning his back against a tree in a very exposed position, when a friend expostulated with him for his recklessness. The Colonel said that the bullet was not moulded that would shoot him that day. In a few seconds after another personal friend came up, and reaching out his hand to the Colonel, the latter stooped a little to grasp it, when a conical cannon ball struck on the spot where, an instant before, was the head of Col. Cowdin, shattering the tree into splinters. The Colonel turned about calmly and remarked "that he was certain that the ball that would kill him was not yet cast," and proceeded to issue his commands.

Col Cameron seemed to have a presentiment of his death. In a conversation with him at his tent, on the evening prior to the battle, he said that he had accepted the command of the gallant Highlanders because he admired them, and inasmuch as he had only a short time to live, he might as well devote it to his country. He asked your correspondent whether he was going to the battle-field. Receiving an affirmative answer, he said, "Good bye, God bless you. We may meet again, but I am afraid not in this world." Some sixteen hours afterward the gallant Colonel was shot from his horse and killed.

Your correspondent was leading his horse over numerous dead bodies, when his attention was attracted by deep moans. Turning about he saw a Virginia cavalry officer, with both legs shot off. He pointed to the canteen. A draught of water seemed to revive him, when, in answer to questions, he said that he was an officer of the Fairfax cavalry, and his horse being shot under him—the ball taking off both his legs—he crept a few yards to lie down to die. He said the rebels had upwards of one hundred and twenty thousand men at Manassas Gap and that, according to his judgment, they could not have less than from four to five thousand men killed and wounded in this battle. This man shortly after expired.

Proceeding a few steps further, an officer whose uniform was trimmed with gold lace, was seen, and having on his breast plate, "Mississippi Rifles." The wounded man raised slowly to his elbow, and endeavoured to bring a Sharpe's rifle to bear upon your correspondent, when acting on the maxim that "self-preservation is the first law of nature," your correspondent put a ballet through his head.

A COWARDLY SUBTERFUGE.

The correspondeat of the New York Tribune says:—

"The Zouaves, after taking one battery, were rushing upon another, when those behind it cried out, 'For God's sake, don't shoot your brothers.'" Upon this the Zouaves reserved their fire, until a volley was poured in upon them by the battery from which the supplication had come."

"PAT" AMONG THE SOUTHERNERS.

A son of the Emerald Island, but not himself green, was taken up [for he was at the time down] near a rebel encampment, not far from the Manassas Junction. In a word, Pat was taking a quiet nap in the shade, and was roused from his slumbers by a scouting party. He wore no special uniform of either army, but looked more like a spy than an alligator, and on this was arrested. "Who are you? what is your name, and where are you from?" were the first questions put to him by the armed party. Pat rubbed his eyes, scratched his head and answered, "By my faith, gintlemen, them is ugly questions to answer any how, and before I answer any of them, I'd be after axin you by yer lave the same thing."

"Well," said the leader, "we are of Scott's army, and belong to Washington." "All right," said Pat, "I know'd ye was gintlemen, for I am that same. Long life to General Scott."

"Aha," replied the scout, "now you rascal, you are our prisoner," and seized him by the shoulder. "How is that?" inquired Pat, "are we not friends?" "No," was the answer, "we belong to General Beauregard's army. "Then ye told me a lie, me boys, and thinking it might be so, I told you another—now tell me the truth, and I'll tell the truth too."

"Well—we belong to the State of South Carolina." "So do I," promptly responded Pat—"and to all the other States of the country, too; and there I am thinking I bate the whole of ye. Do ye think I would come all the way from Ireland to belong to one State, when I had a right to belong to the whole of 'em?" This logic was rather a stumper, but they took him up, as before said, and carried him in for further examination.

It is pretty evident from this specimen, that Pat needed no prompting on a closer examination, and bearing no evidence that he was a spy, they let him off, and the more readily, as while he assured them he was no "politicianer," he persisted in thinking that any man was a great fool to belong to only one State when he has a right (as he had) of belonging to thirty-four States, "besides the territories."

BLONDIN AND THE LION.

M. Blondin wheeled a lion cub over the rope at the Zoological Gardens, Liverpool, on the afternoon of the 29th ultimo—a boisterous wind prevailing at the time. The lion, which is 18 months old, and is called Tom Sayers, after the renowned pugilist, was strapped in the barrow. Much curiosity was excited to see the animal. Scores of glasses were raised, and when the head of young Tom was observed, with his eyes wandering about, as if anxious to know what was to become of him, the clapping and cheering became very great. Having adjusted the barrow Blondin began to move, apparently trembling with the weight of his load. A rope was attached to the barrow, and as it was let out by his assistant, it by some means or other got entangled after he had proceeded some thirty or forty feet.—Blondin halted, and the rope fell to the ground. The beast became sick at looking at him. People kept their breath, expecting every moment that the gymnast, with "Tom Sayers" and the barrow, would be precipitated into the "city of Pekin," or into the lake below. Instantly Blondin's resolution was taken. He evidently could not go on, and he began to move backward cautiously and slowly. Women were terrified, as if they were witnessing an execution. A deep silence prevailed, which was only broken when Blondin landed safely on the platform. Again the barrow was adjusted, and Blondin moved on, this time without a rope. Gradually he reached the centre, and, after resting a short time, began to push his load up the incline. The wind seemed to impede him very much, and it was really frightful to see the barrow roll back occasionally about a foot, as if he who guided it had not sufficient strength to push it on another inch.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.

From the N. Y. Times.

On Saturday afternoon, as the Staten Island Ferry boat Southfield was on her down trip at 5 o'clock, and when about one mile below Governor's Island, a little boy, aged about 3 years, son of Mr. J. H. Watson, who resides at No. 37 First-place, Brooklyn, fell overboard from the Upper deck. He was in the charge of his sister, aged 12 or 13, and was accompanied by a brother aged about 8. They were going to Clifton to visit some friends. The little fellow was sitting on the lower rope of the guard, near the pilot house, aft. A woman who had cakes for sale, wished to pass with her basket, and as he was making room for her, he lost his balance and went over. A scream of horror came from all who saw it, and sister and brother were well nigh paralyzed with fright. A gentleman who sat near hurried to the pilot house, and notified the man at the helm, "a child overboard." In an instant the bell clanged in the engineer's room, wheels and rudder were reversed, the pilot hastened to the other pilot-house, and the boat went back with all speed, following the wake she had just left. A steamboat was coming down the bay and crossed our track about half a mile off, at about the point where the child went over. Every effort was made to signal them to stop, about upon about went over the water from a hundred voices, and hats and handkerchiefs were used with a downward movement; but strange to say, it was interpreted to be what it did not resemble, and these signs of warning and distress were answered by cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs.—This was followed by a loud moan of disappointment, and cries of, "There they have run over him!" All hope of saving the boy seemed to be stifled—but the returning boat kept on, feeling her way cautiously, when presently a little hat was descried, and then a little body, stiff, buoyant, and face upward. A thrill of hopeful expectation of a rescue was felt by the hundred anxious passengers. "There he is! there he is! Slack up, stop her, stop her." The pilot sounded his bell to slow the engines, when a tall spare man was seen divesting himself of hat, coat, vest and boots. He dropped himself from the upper to the lower forward deck; went over the guards, dropped into the water just as the boat was about coming in contact with the body. She had a little too much headway, and cries were heard on all sides, "They will be struck by the wheel! Stop her!" Sure enough they would have been struck, but, with wonderful presence of mind, the gentleman dove under the wheel and came up near the stern with the boy in his arms. Life-preservers were thrown over, and a small boat was lowered. The gentleman seized the latter with one hand, laid the boy in with the other, got in himself, and commenced at once to roll and rub him. Presently they were taken on board; the child was heard to cry, and the glad news, "He is alive!" "He will be saved!" went from mouth to mouth until every eye beamed with a smile of intense satisfaction. The sister and brother came forward excited and in tears.—They assisted to divest him of his drenched clothing; and a blanket was brought, in which he was wrapped, and the efforts to resuscitate were diligently pushed. One gentleman took from his wallet a newspaper slip containing printed directions, by E Meriam, for rescuscitating a drowned person. When the boat arrived at Quarantine landing, the body was taken to the residence of the Health Officer, where Dr. Gunn and the other health officer, with the ladies in the house, gave proper attention to the little sufferer. Word was immediately sent to friends at Clifton, and the parents were telegraphed to Brooklyn. They arrived between 8 and 9 o'clock, and found that the child was restored to consciousness, and his chief complaint was thus expressed: "Papa, I fell in the water and lost my hat." It was with much difficulty that the brave man who thus periled his own life to save this little fellow could be induced to give his name; but the impropriety of his keeping it from the knowledge of the parents was so urged upon him, that he finally wrote his address on a card for the sister, with a request not to show it except to her parents. It transpired, however, at the landing that this noble deed was performed by "Capt. J. Kittredge, care of E. F. Teft & Co., Nos. 127 and 128 Duane-street, New York." His wife with a nurse and child, were believed to be on board at the time.

SUICIDE BY A LUNATIC.

On Thursday morning last, a young man named Edwin Wetherall Brown, residing in the Township of Grantham, who had shown some symptoms of mental derangement for some time back, was brought to town in charge of his brother, W. H. Brown, for the purpose of being lodged in some place of safety. After his arrival he grew decidedly worse, and in the course of the day he was placed in the St. Ursule Police Station, for safe keeping, until other arrangements should be made. In the meantime his brother proceeded to the Recorder's Court for the purpose of obtaining a commitment against him, as a person dangerous to be at large. On his return to the Police Station, the cell in which he had been placed was opened for the purpose of removing him, when he was found suspended by his cravat, from the bars of the cell window, quite dead. On being confined in the cell he did not appear violent, or in any way to conduct himself so as to justify the slightest suspicion that he was about to put an end to his existence. The deceased was quite a young man.—Quebec Chronicle.

THE PRINTER.

A printer is the most curious being living. He may have a "bank" and "coins," and not be worth a penny, have SMALL CAPS, and neither have wife nor children. Others may run fast, but he gets along swiftest by "setting" fast. He may be making "impressions" without using eloquence; may use the "ley" without offending, and be telling the truth; while others cannot stand, when they set, he can "set" standing, and even do both at the same time; use "furniture," and yet have no dwelling; may make, put away "pie," and never see a pie, much less eat it during his life; be a human being and a "rat" at the same time; may "press" a great deal and not ask a favor; may handle a "shooting iron" and know nothing about a cannon, gun or pistol; he may move the "lever" that moves the world and yet be far from moving the globe; spread "sheets" without being a housewife; he may lay his "form" on a "bed" and yet be obliged to sleep on the floor; he may use the † without shedding blood, and from the earth may handle the ; he may be of a "rolling" disposition, and yet never desire to travel; he may have a "sheep's foot," and not be deformed; never be without a "cass" and know nothing of law or physic; be always "correcting" his "errors" and growing worse every day; have emigrated without ever having the arms of a lass around him; have his "form" locked up, and at the same time be free from jail, watch house or any other confinement.

INFLUENCE OF MARRIAGE ON THE DURATION OF LIFE.

The influence of marriage on the probable duration of life, opens a curious field for speculation. That it has an influence more than one writer bears testimony; and statistics have been adduced in support of the theory. Voltaire has asserted, that the majority of persons who commit suicide are unmarried, adducing this circumstances as an evidence that the wedded state is favorable to the prolongation of life. Hufeland also entertains the existence of such a theory; and Depercieux reports, "that people live longer in a state of matrimony than celibacy—the number of married men who die after the age of twenty being nearly one-half less than the number of bachelors dying at the same period; and for forty-three Benedicts or widows who reach the age of ninety, there is only one-seventh part thereof of single men found to attain the same age."

On this subject Dr. Milne remarks:—"It is obvious that the best organized, and most vigorous individuals of both sexes, but especially females, are the most likely to marry; and that but a small portion of those will be married [particularly of females] who labor under an infirmity that tends materially to shorten life. The married, therefore, will, upon an average, be a selection of such lives from the general mass of the population as would have been the best, whether they had married or not; and it is very difficult to determine what effect marriage may have had in improving them."

FOLLOW YOUR NOSE.

A man, whose son ran away for "parts unknown," advertised him in the papers, describing him as "red-haired, blue-eyed, and having a turned-up nose." One evening, while the anxious father was as usual inquiring of every one he saw concerning his runaway son, a wag who was standing by exclaimed: "I'm quite positive your son will turn up soon, my man." "Have you seen him, my friend?" asked the father, grasping the other by the hand. "You say his nose turned up, don't you?" "Yes, yes; but have you seen him?" "No, I haven't, but if his nose turned up, he'll turn up too, for every one must follow his nose, you know."

THE VENTRILOQUIST.

As a dryman was furiously beating his lank, half-starved mule, near the Government Square, Havana, he was astonished to hear the animal exclaim, "Enough! you brute!" The dryman looked aghast, and searched under his dray and around his mule to find the origin of this strange, sepulchral voice, when again he was horrified to hear, from the animal to all appearances, "you're a brute!" The dryman was dumbfounded, trembled like an aspen leaf, and dropped his whip as if stung by an adder. He blessed himself, and was about falling on his knees, when he again heard, "I was your mother once upon a time!" This clapped the climax, and a gentleman from the crowd that had gathered around endeavored to explain to the terror-stricken dryman that sometimes disembodied spirits return to the world in the form of animals. Just at that moment Signor Blitz, the magician and ventriloquist, accompanied by his two friends, who had been looking on this strange scene, and enjoying the fun, adjourned to the Union Coffee-House, in the neighboring corner, and left the crowd endeavoring to induce the beast to speak again, and the dryman embracing the poor mule in a most filial manner.

THEATRE PREACHING IN LONDON.

We learn from an exchange that the vast sums expended upon theatrical edifices in the British metropolis, have not been so expended, as it turns out for the lovers of pleasure only. The lovers of prayer and preaching are entering, with religious services, into the scenes of mirth and merriment, and the sounds of gospel invitation and warning follow closely upon those of worldly pleasure. Seven theatres are now open on every Lord's day and evening, and among them are some of the most renowned in the city. Immense congregations are assembled every Sabbath evening, many, doubtless, attracted by the novelty of Divine worship in such places; yet instances are constantly coming to light of permanent and substantial good arising from these services. Lord Shaftesbury lately invited the preachers in these theatres to a meeting for Christian fellowship, at which many interesting facts were stated respecting the good done in this way. This certainly is turning to good account the places where so many hours have been spent, and so much money expended, with small return for the investment.

VOLCANIC ERUPTION IN ICELAND.

A letter dated Eyrabaki, Iceland, June 19th, says:—

"On our arrival here we were informed that the Orœfa and Seapta Jokulls had both been in a state of eruption a few days back, the particulars of which we have been made acquainted with by the ministers of that neighborhood, who was present and witnessed it, and the account which he gives is as follows:—On the 23rd of May the first signs of eruption were observed by an unusual flow of water from the Orœfa, and on the morning of the 24th they were awakened by a strong smell of sulpher, which became overpowering, and which was apparent at a distance of 200 miles; at the same time all metals except iron became tarnished, although in many instances carefully wrapped up in cotton. It appears to have affected these metals at a distance of 50 miles from the mountain. The Rev. Mr. Pollison, our informant, states that this is the first real volcanic eruption which has occurred in the Orœfa Jokull, although the rivers Skeidava and Nepeo, flowing from Skapta, have been regularly flooded every sixth year, the latter invariably following the former after the lapse of 24 hours, on all of which occasions large masses of ice are brought down from the mountain, and remain in the low country for years before they disappear. On this occasion an interval of ten years has elapsed since the last regular flooding of these rivers took place, and the quantity of water sent down by the present eruption completely inundated the flat land between these two rivers, a distance of 20 miles. Smoke, in great quantities, has been ejected on this occasion from both of these mountains, a circumstance not before known. Mr. Pollison was called from home three days after the eruption commenced, when it was as vigorous as ever, but has heard since that it has subsided, which we can corroborate, as we sailed close along the land on Tuesday morning last and had a fine view of the whole mountain range; but in the fact of the absence of any unusual quantity of fresh water on the ocean near the land, while it abounded at 80 miles off, proved the thing. The quantity of debris from the Orœfa appears to have been very great, as the coast here a distance of 150 miles from the mountain is covered with pumice stone and brushwood."

AMERICAN FEELING TOWARD ENGLAND.

From the London Times, June 25.

If there be any one who believes it possible for England to avert the suspicions of the Americans by fairness of dealing, or to escape their abuse by the most stupid courtesy, let him read the files of American newspapers that have arrived by the last mail. When it is remembered that for six months every organ of the English Commonwealth—the Queen in her speech on opening the session, the Ministers every time that a question has been asked, the House of Commons, and the press, have, with remarkable unanimity and constancy, abstained from uttering a word that might encourage the secessionists, the storm that is raging against us throughout the Northern States seems as strange as it is scandalous. Though one or two conflicts have taken place the position of affairs does not seem to have changed much within the last fortnight. Everywhere there is a turmoil, out of which ascend confused rumors and contradictory prophecies, assurances that the turbulence of a few rebels will be put down in a month or two, mixed with anticipations of serious commercial losses through the Southern privateers. But high above all sounds is the cry of hostility to England.—For some time the New York papers and the speakers at public meetings have been full of the hatred of the British aristocracy to the Union—a hatred which would show itself in partnership with the South, until the trampled millions of the old country rose to assert their rights. And now it would appear that the Cabinet at Washington has yielded to the national madness. We know not what reports respecting the British Government and people have been sent home by the new minister of the United States, but even after the display made by the colleagues at Paris we can hardly suppose that he can have ventured upon such statements as are attributed to "a distinguished American" by the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald. We now learn that the English Admiralty is about to send a most formidable fleet to the American waters, that a number of our largest class of war-vessels are being fitted out in our dockyards, ostensibly for the Gulf, but really intended to operate along the Southern coast. The British ministry we are told, strongly sympathizes with the Southern insurgents. But "only let the Lincoln Government assume a bold and determined policy towards England, and all may yet be well." According to this same authority, the "bold and determined policy" was immediately to be tried. All the available vessels of war are to be at once brought into active service, and all means used to hasten naval preparations generally. This intelligence confirms our former observation, that the hostility to the secessionists was being largely diverted into a new channel, and that as suddenly as the North changed from a peace to a war policy in April, so suddenly has the causeless fury against this country supervened to give a new excitement to the multitude.

The natural susceptibilities of a foreign nation are at all times worthy of respect.—Where any of our neighbors have reason to suppose that we have acted in an unfriendly or ungenerous manner towards them, or that their interests are likely to be affected disadvantageously by our acts, the opinion, though erroneous, deserves to be removed by explanations on our part. It must be expected that nations will sometimes give way to groundless jealousy, and misinterpret the policy of others by viewing it as distorted by their own fears. In all such cases a frank and ready assurance of good intentions will never be withheld by the suspected state. But in the present case, the people of the Northern States have, without the shadow of reason, and in spite of manifold instances of courtesy and good will on our part, chosen to lash themselves into a fury because we have taken the only course which was open to us, and declared our neutrality in a war between two powerful, energetic, and obstinate communities. It cannot be supposed that they are ignorant of the reasons which compelled us to this course, for these are obvious to every one who has any knowledge of international law and the laws of war; they have been plainly stated by Lord John Russell in Parliament, and they have been laid down by American jurists in cases almost identical with the present. Now is there the least pretence for saying that aprehension has anything to do with the noisy attacks that are made upon us. No American in his sense believes that we are about to give any help to the Confederate States, or that we hastened to recognize them as a belligerent power in order that we might supply them with arms, or share with them the profit of captured merchantmen. The reasons advanced by the Northerners to justify their indignation are only pretexts used to cover the real cause of it—namely, the wound which their vanity has suffered by our not having shown sufficient admiration of the levy made in obedience to President Lincoln's proclamation. This is the head and front of our offending. All the talk about aiding the secessionists and raising rebels to the dignity of patriots is merely an affectation to conceal the real grievance. This being plainly the state of things, we shall not attempt to coax the Northerners into good humor by assurances of any kind. Our conduct in the American civil war is before the world, and is so completely approved that it has been followed in every step by the French Government, and will, no doubt, be also followed by other maritime states of Europe. The coarse invectives which fill the Northern papers may therefore continue; they will not be deprecated by us. The politicians and journalists who, a few weeks ago, were, advocating the seizure of Canada must continue to lament that the North has not met with due sympathy from England in its crusade against the Confederate States. The Northerners have thrown themselves into a passion, and we must leave them to recover their temper.

RECOGNITION OF ITALY BY FRANCE.

From the London Times.

The results of this resolution are easier to calculate than its motives. It reduces the perils of the rising kingdom to a number and magnitude which time and prudence are alone required to surmount. To appreciate its significance, and even to do justice to its wisdom, we must recall the gloomy prophecies which men of all classes and opinions, from the most bigoted apologists of Austria to Mazzini himself, were wont to hazard respecting the alliance between France and Italy. We were reminded that "the fixed idea of Louis Napoleon is to plant the Bonapartist system on the Continent of Europe;" we were assured that the French would never quit Italian soil, except at the price of half the Peninsula and the co-operation of an Italian contingent against the Rhenish provinces; that Russia herself was a party to the bargain; that Hungary was to be reconstituted under the joint protectorate of the Czar and the French Emperor; and that the invasion of Italy was but the prelude to a grand coalition of Western, Southern, and Eastern Europe against England, Germany, and Turkey. It is not worth while to discuss how many grains of truth there may have been in this astonishing programme, for, however formidable the conspiracy may have been, it is certainly now exploded. From this time, there will be on the shores of the Mediterranean a maritime power unencumbered by any traditions of territorial self-aggrandizement and pledged by the strongest interests to peaceful self-development—indebted for its existence to France, and for its constitution to England—saved by the non-intervention, as she had been ruined by intervention—and qualified to exercise a moderating influence in the councils of Europe. Till the formal assent of France was obtained, this was hardly more than an aspiration—it is now all but a certainty.

The recognition of Italy is accompanied by a "preservation," which both parties are at much pains to distinguish from a "condition." "The French troops will continue to occupy Rome so long as the interests which caused their presence there shall not be protected by sufficient guarantees." Less than this the Emperor could not have said, and we are informed by Baron Ricasoli that "negotiations are constantly going on" to overcome the difficulty in question. It is one which is constantly tending to solve itself, and which just now seems nearer than ever to this spontaneous solution. The health of Pius IX. has long been failing, and he must be a very sanguine believer in the temporal destiny of Papacy who can expect its secular prerogatives to survive the present Pope. There is no necessity to make the incorporation of Rome the "delenda est Carthago" of Italian patriotism. Victor Emmanuel has a revisionary interest in the Eternal City expectant on the death of a feeble old man, and which may in certain contingencies fall into possession still earlier. We do more believe that the French Emperor will long refuse to come to terms about Venetia. A period of time far shorter than was required to carry out the great measures of Toleration, Parliamentary Reform, or Free Trade, will then have created a nation, and Italy, after her long trance of suspended animation, will awake to find her dream true—unity and freedom from the Alps to the Adriatic.

MAKING HISTORY.

"Bull's Run," despite the lack of euphony, will be a classical spot in American history for all time to come. Some day, perhaps, when philosophers sit in judgment upon history, the name may be changed to Soldiers' Stampede, but meanwhile it will be treason to associate Bull's Run with any other ideas than those of military glory.

Early in the war, some ambitious civilian proclaimed a purpose of making history. Ever since, when a lawyer-general has desired to say something fine, he has said, "we are making history." To this pervading idea, mayhap, the ubiquitous authors of telegraphic trash seek to give utterance. They would fain be Macaulays, every one. They forget, however, that the romantic historian reserved his superlatives for great occasions, and contented himself with ordinary phraseology when ordinary events were to be described. With them, every thing is grand, magnificent, brilliant, unparalleled. Their generals paraphrase the First Bonapartes at every stage of their journeyings. "Forty centuries look down upon us," was the apostrophe of the real general when he had led his veteran troops into the land of the Pyramids. The Bull's Run generals exclaim with like grandiloquence when they take possession of an evacuated battery. They are all the time "making history," and the newspaper correspondents are all the time helping them. The generals are all Cæsars; the reporters would like to be all Xenophons, but they are not.

This business of making history with a view to contemporary effect promises to be serious before the war reaches its termination. American heroes attach like value to posthumous fame. They insist upon realizing the present value of the inheritance belonging to immortality, and newspapers are trying to help them. Thus, every skirmish is held up to admiration as something marvellous; and though after five hours' fighting, with a thousand men engaged, the fact leak out that one was killed, three received scratches, and five are missing, the historian finisises his description with flourishes of which Parny was unworthy, and far too good for Waterloo. We have wondered whence words could be obtained to narrate a really serious occurrence; for unless a second Webster be born to make havoc with the English language, there will soon be no words in the Dictionary equal to substantial fighting. But the telegraphic jumble purporting to be a narrative of the last conflict—being the only conflict worthy of name—furnishes a solution of the difficulty. The big words have been expended upon little things, the big affairs are to be done by comparison. Every critic knows the convenience of the method. You say of a singer that she surpasses Malibrad, and throws Jenny Lind into the shade. When you want to escape the trouble of analysing a tragedian's performance, you drag in Macready, Booth, the African Roscius, the elder Kean, and so on, and the simple public pronounce you a well-read man. So it is with the battles of the American war. We are to be familiarized with their wonderous proportions by a prompt application of the comparative measurement. A beginning has been made with Bull's run. As the telegraph story runs "there was nothing like it at Inkerman or the Alma."

Unfortunately, comparisons are not inexhaustible, and we begin to fear that at the rate begun with Bull's Run the well of ancient and modern history will soon be pumped dry. For if an army demoralised, broken to pieces, and trotting from the strife fast as legs could go, constitute an event which may be likened only to Inkerman and the Alma, what comparison would have served had the troops stood their ground and fought out the fight? And if Bull's run is to rank as a second Inkerman, may not the Manassas Junction be considered a second siege of Sevastopol? And will not the crossing of the Missio be the standard for the crossing of the Rappahannock? And will aught less than the passage across the Alps satisfy those who undertake to record the perils and difficulties of the journey from Manassas to Richmond? Then there will be the siege of Richmond, and battles, and skirmishes, and deeds of valour without limit. Surely, history will hardly endure the test.

The consolation is, that though European and Asiatic history will speedily be ransacked in vain for illustrative analogies applicable to deeds of glory like unto the battle at Bull's Run, Yankee inventiveness may be relied upon to deliver us from the dilemma. The makers of history who have already made second editions of Inkerman and the Alma, will not fail of bombast when occasions for its exercise arise.—Thank goodness, whatever else fails, that will not.

But what will be the future value of Professor Creasy's book? Is a presumptuous moment he wrote "The Seven Decisive Battles of History," The volume will hereafter be waste paper. The Professor forgot that the Americans not only write history but make it; and of course the seven actual battles will be superseded by seven invented ones.—Leader.

SOUTHERN DETERMINATION AND REIGN OF TERROR.

Mr. Russell, in his letter, which was written from New Orleans, draws anything but a pleasant picture of the state of matters at that city and in the South generally. He says,—

"It is impossible to resist the conviction that the Southern Confederacy can only be conquered by means as irresistable as those by which Poland was subjugated. The South will fall, if at all, as a nation prostrate at the feet of a victorious enemy.—There is no doubt of the unanimity of the people. If words mean anything, they are animated by only one sentiment, and they will resist the North as long as they can command a man or a dollar. There is nothing of a sectional character in this disposition of the South. In every State there is only one voice audiable. Hereafter, indeed, State jealousies may work their own way. Whatever may be the result, unless the men are the merest braggarts—and they do not look like it—they will fight to the last before they give in, and their confidence in their resources is only equalled by their determination to test them to the utmost. There is a noisy vociferation about their declarations of implicit trust and reliance on their slaves, which makes one think they do "protest too much;" and it remains to be seen whether the slaves will remain faithful to their masters should the Abolition army ever come among them as an armed propaganda. One thing is obvious here. A large number of men who might be usefully employed in the ranks are idling about the streets. The military enthusiasm is in proportion to the property interest of the various classes of the people, and the very boast that so many rich men are serving in the ranks is a significant proof either of the want of a substratum, or of the absence of great devotion to the cause in any such layer of white people as may underlie the great slaveholding, mercantile, and planting oligarchy. The whole state of Louisiana contains about 50,000 men liable to serve when called for. Of that number only 15,000 are enrolled and under any shape whatever; and if one is to judge of the state of affairs by the advertisement which appears from the Adjutant-General's office, there was some difficulty in procuring the 3000 men—merely 3000 volunteers—"to serve during the war," who are required by the Confederate Government.—There is plenty of 'prave 'ords,' and if fierce writing and talking could do work, the armies on both sides would have been killed and eaten long ago. It is found out that the lives of the citizens at Pensacola are too valuable to be destroyed in attacking Pickens A storm that shall drive away the ships, a plague, yellow fever, mosquitoes, rattlesnakes, small-pox,—any of these agencies is looked to with confidence to do the work of shot, shell, and bayonet."

EXHIBITION OF THE GREAT EASTERN.

From the Quebec Chronicle.

The great ship was opened to the public for the first time, on Thursday morning.—We certainly expected considerable excitement and a rush of strangers from all parts, but the reality far surpassed our anticipations. By the train and steamers, excursionists arrived in hundreds—not only from Montreal, Toronto, Kingston, and other places West, but from Portland and other towns in the States bordering on our frontier. The ticket office at Messrs Gilmour & Co.'s establishment in St. Peter street, was besieged with applicants all day, and, it is said, three thousand tickets were sold up to the hour of noon.

The different small steamers plying between the wharves and the Great Eastern were crowded each trip. Many persons from the country parishes in the vicinity of the city came to see the leviathan, and contributed their numbers to swell the crowd of sight-seers. It is impossible to form any idea of the probable number of visitors to the ship, during her stay in our port, inasmuch as the numbers who went yesterday do not form a fair ground for calculation. There are many persons, who, through fear of accident, avoid visiting any place or object of interest on the first day, in order to avoid the rush, and the consequence is that the first day of an exhibition is rarely that on which the greatest number of persons visit. Great as the crowd was we expect to see it going on increasing for some time to come.

It is needless to say that those who went were, at once, delighted and astonished with what they saw. Our oldest citizens, accustomed as they are to the sight of fine vessels, freely awarded the palm to the Great Eastern—not only in size, but in every other respect. Every one was dazzled with the splendor of her cabins, which almost realized in their magnificence the idea of the interior of some Eastern palace. Persons of a romantic turn of mind longed for a sea voyage in such a marvel of beauty and richness. Practical men contemplated in astonishment the massive proportions of everything they saw on board—the perfection of her huge machinery, and the vast dimensions of her cargo space.

Our hotels are crowded with visitors, but there is room for more, and we expect to find the current of sight-seers setting in the direction of the ancient capital, for one week more at least. There are many objects of interest in our city and vicinity, and we have no doubt that many will avail themselves of the double opportunity of seeing the Great Ship, and beholding the natural beauties of which Quebec can boast.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

The Freeman's Journal says:—It is stated that Her Majesty the Queen will arrive at Dublin on the 15th of August, and will remain for a week at the vice-regal lodge, his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant remaining at the castle during the sojourn of Her Majesty. It is also stated that the Queen will proceed from Dublin to Carton, where she will honor the Duke of Leinster by becoming his guest for a week. Her Majesty will visit the camp every day during her stay in the neighborhood. She will proceed to Killarney and Cork, and it is stated that she will return by Dublin, and on her return to England she will be accompanied by the Prince of Wales. The Cork Constitution says: "It is expected that her Majesty will arrive in Killarney on Monday, the 20th of August. During two of the four days' sojourn of the royal party at the Lakes they will be the guests of the Right Honorable Colonel Herbert, M. P., at Muckross, and on the other two days they will be partakers of Lord Viscount Castlerosse's hospitalities at Kenmare-house. All arrangements, including the most magnificent decorations, for the reception and entertainment of the royal party, at both mansions are costly in the extreme, and quite commensurate with the exalted station of the illustrious strangers. A numerous staff of tradesmen and artists has arrived from London, who are all busily engaged, night and day, under the supervision of Mr Justin M'Carthy, of Killarney, in executing the several alterations and improvements. The leading members of the royal party will, it is expected, be her Majesty the Queen, the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Viscount Palmerston and His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant. It is not yet finally decided whether the party will include any of the juvenile members of the royal family."

LIGHTNING!

Brooklyn Heights, March 18th, 1859.

Messrs. Reyburn & Hunter:—

Mr. R. Hickok, your agent, requests my opinion in writing as to a lightning conductor, which you have submitted to my inspection, and as to its adaptedness to the purposes of protection against lightning.

I will premise my remarks by stating that I am in favor of lightning conductors generally, as the best means of protection to life and property, independent of any particular form or mode of construction; and this favourable opinion is the result of observations that have extended over half a century of time, and over a large extent of geographical surface. Our record of lightning phenomena is, without doubt, the most minute and most extensive on the globe—extending to all climates and to the remote districts of the earth. These records furnish the most abundant evidence of the protection which metals afford against lightning. I will briefly state, under several heads, some facts that will be convincing to any observing person:

1st. No case of death by lightning on a steamboat, within a railroad car, in an iron building or an iron vessel, or to a telegraph operator, has come to my knowledge.—Steamboats have been in use more than fifty years; railroad cars about thirty years; and telegraph wires about twenty years.

No death by lightning has been known in a vessel furnished with lightning conductors nor have marine underwriters ever been called upon to pay for loss or damage by lightning to a vessel or cargo, where the vessel was furnished with lightning conductors, and the continuity uninterrupted to the water.

The Fire Insurance Companies in the City of New York make a deduction of 10 per cent on the premium of insurance upon buildings furnished with conductors.

Lightning conductors are beneficial to health; persons who suffer from fear during thunder storms are relieved of that feeling when in buildings furnished with conductors.

The idea that some persons entertain that metals are dangerous from their attracting lightning need not be indulged when the exemption from lightning in iron buildings, iron vessels, railroad cars, steamboats and telegraph operations is considered.

Building having metal roof, are, to some extent, protected against lightning, but trees in front or near a building afford no protection against lightning.

The best position that a person can occupy in a building having no conductors, during thunder storms, is on a chair, with the feet on the rounds. Feather beds and feathers are no protection against lightning.

A person struck with lightning should be freely drenched with cold water until animation is restored.

A rod covered with a coat of paint will not conduct lightning; I have examined several painted rods that have failed to conduct lightning—hence my conclusion that a painted rod will not conduct lightning.

I cheerfully give you this letter, feeling that you are engaged in a good work, and I wish you great success. I devoutly wish that every habitation, every building, and every shade tree resorted to by cattle, horses or sheep, was furnished with lightning conductors.

Before lightning rods were invented, grottos under ground and under water were constructed as a place of resort during thunder storms; now lightning rods afford all that protection, but people neglect to procure them, and nothing short of the crash of broken thunderbolts and the vivid burnings of fierce lightnings seem to awaken the human mind to the need of the use of this means of protection.

Yours, very respectfully,
E. MERRIAM.

SAFETY DURING THUNDER STORMS.

1. Many persons suffer greatly from fear during thunder storms, and I have recorded cases of death from such fear. My investigations and researches into lightening phenomena extend over a period of more than forty years, and the record I have kept is probably the most minute in existence.—That metals attract and conduct lightning is clearly evident; but how far metals attract electricity is a matter of conjecture; but I am free to hazard the opinion, that a building with a metallic rod or rods is no more liable to be struck by lightning than a building without such necessary appendages, and when struck is protected, as are all the inmates of that building. It is often seen, that mankind are more ready to take counsel of their fears than to seek after that truth which is to be found everywhere in nature.

2. Letters which I have received, from time to time, from the Secretary of the U. S., Navy state that none of the vessels of the U. S. Navy have received any damage by lightning if their conductors were up.

3. In 1831, the British Board of Admiralty organised a commission to enquire into the cases of damage by lightning to vessels in the English Navy. That commission, after a long session, found no case of damage by lightning, where the vessels were protected by electric conductors reaching into the water.

4. The Marine Insurance Company of New York made a deduction of 2½ per cent. on the premium of insurance on all vessels furnished with conductors. There is no place on record of a claim being on vessels or cargoes for loss or damage by lightning where the vessels were furnished with conductors; but they have paid millions of dollars for losses by lightning where the vessels were without conductors.

5. I have briefly stated the above facts, showing the absolute protection that lightning conductors afford to human life and also to property: also that metals do not so attract electricity as to render conductors dangerous in the least.

6. Dwellings should have a rod on every chimney, and if there should be a cupola on the house, that should have a rod also. In passing from the chimney to the earth, the rod should not come in contact with the tin or copper gutters, or with the iron railings, but should be kept separate from all such obstructions.

7. A barn fifty feet long, should have 3 rods running to the earth, reaching down to permanent moisture. School houses particularly require protection from electricity.

Shade trees, near dwellings, particularly need conductors, as they of themselves afford no protection whatever from lightning. Insulating is an important matter. I prefer glass to any other. The best mode of fastening the insulators to the building is with a screw pointed iron, from four to six inches long.

Accidents from October 1st, 1855, to September 30th, 1856, in the United States:—Persons killed by lightning, 78; injured, 81. Animals killed, 53. Buildings burnt, 200; struck, not burnt, 245.—Vessels struck, 84. No cases of loss of life by lightning has ever been known in a vessel protected with metallic conductors; nor have underwriters been called upon to pay for losses by lightning to vessels or cargoes in any case whatever.

I regard every man who constructs a lightning rod as rendering good service to mankind, and although I differ some in opinion about the construction, yet I have a kind feeling toward all that follow the business of protecting their fellow-men from the shafts of electricity. I have never had any pecuniary interests in furnishing or putting up electric conductors; and my only object in devoting so much time and space to this subject is to benefit my fellow man, the accomplishing of which is the highest reward this earth can give.

A REVIEW OF THE VOTES AND VOTERS' LISTS.

We subjoin an analysis of the votes, as well as compare these with the voters' lists as shown by the recent election. Smith and Harvey have 466 names on the voters' list of 1860, of these 370 were recorded, leaving 96 not recorded.

Otonabee has 462,	recorded 402,	bal.	60,
Dummer has 192,	" 164,	"	28,
Belmont has 83,	" 67,	"	16,
Peterboro' 689,	" 477,	"	212,
Douro has 286,	" 268,	"	18
Monaghan has 193	" 124,	"	69.

The Town of Peterborough it should be observed votes in Wards, and many of the voters have property in two or more wards, and consequently a larger number of apparent votes will appear unrecorded from this fact than in the Townships. Douro records within 18 of the whole number; of these we know of 11 who did not vote or who voted elsewhere, to which add the three dead men and this brings the number to within three of the whole. From these facts it is evident that if Col. Haultain and the electors had had fair play in Douro, his majority would have been between 60 and 100 in place of 30. We reproduce the votes as recorded for each candidate:

	Haultain.	Conger.	Majorities H.	Majorities C.
Peterborough,	222	255		33
Ashburnham	45	67		22
Monaghan,	97	27	70
Smith,	268	102	166
Douro,	43	220		177
Otonabee,	283	119	164
Ennismore,	8	123		115
Belmont,	49	18	31
Dummer,	123	41	82
Asphodel,	122	184		62
Back Townships	32	106		74
	1292	1262

These figures give the Colonel a majority of over one hundred in the old townships where Mr. Conger is well known, but where the Colonel was a comparative stranger, showing most conclusively that Mr Conger was at a discount where best known. His anxiety to have the lists of 1861 used for the back country showed his fear of defeat, without the assistance of strangers who have been instructed to believe that it is to him they are indebted for the opening up of the country. It is also stated that in some of the back townships an Assessor or Assessors actually valued a number of farms at an amount above their actual value, so as to secure votes for Mr. Conger. We do not vouch for the truth of this, but it has been stated to us by parties whom we judge should know. It is said owing to a change in the qualification that the lists of 1861 disqualifies many in the older townships who are entitled to vote by those of 1860.

It has been asserted again and again by the Conger party that money has been very freely used and bribery resorted to by the supporters of Col. Haultain, to secure his return—that falsehood and corruption the most glaring had been employed to damage Mr. Conger, and that in fact the latter gentleman's defeat was clearly traceable to the unfair means employed by the opposing party. But the loudest complaint of all is the reputed "illegal interference" of the Sheriff in preventing the use of the voters lists of the present year being used in the back country, where Mr. Conger's strength was said to be. We suppose these complainers are now at least satisfied of the illegality of the lists of 1861 being used, since there has been so much ventilation of the subject through the press. Now had not the Returning officer acted as he did we should be put to the trouble and annoyance of another election, as all members returned by the lists of 1861 will undoubtedly be unseated. We say that Mr. Sheriff Hall deserves the thanks of the entire constituency for the pains he took to have the election held according to law. In spite of the most positive and direct orders to his deputies to use the lists of 1860, those of Ashburnham and Asphodel, at the instance and guarantee, it is reported, of a County official, did use the lists of 1861.—It fortunately happens that the returns of those Municipalities do not decide or affect the position of the Member returned,—the majorities from both being for Mr. Conger;—otherwise we should assuredly have had the annoyance of a new election.

If Mr. Conger had been returned, it would have been an easy matter to unseat him from this fact itself, as well as from the illegal and outrageous conduct of parties in the Township of Douro. A reference to the figures will show that it came nearest to polling the number on the voters list of any Municipality in the County in proportion to the number of voters. Persons of respectability residing in the Township state that jostling, squeezing, threatening and beating were resorted to, to keep from the polls the voters of Col. Haultain,—that the names of three men who are dead are recorded for Mr. Conger,—and that a number of names of voters who did not come to the poll at all, are entered for the latter gent, and who if they had voted would have voted for the Colonel. It is stated that 30 votes at least are entered for Mr. Conger which should not have been. Deny it as you may, gentlemen, intimidation, corruption and violence were used in Douro, and possibly an example may yet be made of the evil-doers. We heard a respectable resident say the other day "It is well that the new election law was in force, otherwise Douro would have manufactured votes enough—a la Russel and Quebec—to turn the election as she wanted it." And we here say most unequivocally that it is our opinion that Mr. Conger had fair play, yea and more than fair play, he was weighed in the balances and although dead weight was thrown in beside him, he was yet found wanting. It is to be hoped that he will be wise enough at last to know he is not required to represent the County of Peterboro in Parliament, and that he committed a grave error in giving up a "lucrative situation" to serve the ungrateful public. It is bad enough to yield when pressed, but it is folly in the extreme to rush unsolicited before a constituency, begging its suffrages when not required. His rejection has, we regret to say not yet taught him a salutary lesson, as he took his final leave of the electors at the Declaration with a very offensive speech, which will not be forgotten by those who heard it. It afforded additional proof if that were needed, that he is "not the man for Galway." Rumor has it that he has been quartered in the bureau of agriculture, and again it has been stated that a situation was offered him, but he declined accepting it—on what grounds we did not hear. In our opinion he would be better in some office in a subordinate capacity than attempting to be a legislator,—a situation he is not cut out for. We know such an opinion expressed will incur his wrath. It is a home truth nevertheless that many will endorse, who will also join us in saying that it is a pity that so much ambition and energy were not employed in a more useful way.

HOW THE CORRUPTIONIST PRESS IS SUSTAINED.

(From the Hamilton Times.)

We have before us a newspaper published in an obscure village, and owned by a member of the Cabinet, which contains six columns and a half of advertisements from the heads of departments. Upwards of one fourth of its entire space is thus filled up in this way, for which the public have to pay. It is a gross outrage on common decency; but it is by such means that the corruptionist press is kept alive all over the country, to the scandal of the Province, and the injury of honest enterprise.

Session after session motions have been made for returns showing the several sums paid for advertising by the public departments, but some how or other means have been found to prevent the information being afforded. * * * Such is the infatuation of very many on the Opposition side that they would prefer patronizing the corruptionist organ if only to show their great liberality; but on the other side there is no such weakness. Supporters of the Ministry would submit to inconvenience (and frequently do) rather than throw a bone to an Oppositionist dog! Thus it is that the corruptionist press flourishes by crushing out the honest exponents of public opinion, while Opposition journals find difficulty to live at all.

Two things must be learned from this: the one is that corruption feeds on corruption, by the consent, if not with the approbation, of the public; the other is, that the public care much less for the honesty and independence of the press than is generally supposed.

[We have a very good illustration of the truth of the above in a paper published at our own door-step. A recent issue of that print contained about 5 columns of Sheriff's advertisements, and about two columns of abuse of the same Sheriff. The public will not wonder at that when they are told that the Sheriff dare not give a line of official advertising to the Opposition journal at the risk of future penalties or dismissal from office. $750 per annum is about the amount of official pap paid by John A. Macdonald's directions as the price for the "independent support" of a local paper. Who dare say after this that we have not a "liberal government and a free press?"]

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Council met on Thursday night. A communication from Rev. Mr. Vicars, of Lindsay, on behalf of the sufferers in the late disastrous fire there, and asking assistance, was read.

A communication dated 22nd inst., from Elias Burnham to the Mayor, notifying him that if the amount of judgment in the suit of Burnham vs. Peterborough was not paid forthwith the execution would be placed in the Sheriff's hands next day, was read.

The Mayor stated that the Sheriff had seized the fire-engine and hay-scales, on the above, and that the amount of damages and costs was £40. 6s. 3d., and interest from 15th April last.

The Mayor and fire committee were instructed to have the engine, hooks, ladders, &c., put in efficient working order.

The Council again met on Monday night.

Several petitions were read and referred to respective committees.

A report from the Finance committee was read recommending the payment of several accounts, one of which was the sum of $10 to Mr. Geo. Bell for assisting the Town Clerk in preparing the list of voters for 1861. Mr. Stevenson moved that the report (with the objectionable item) be adopted. Mr. Ormond moved, in amendment, seconded by Mr. Toole,—That whereas the list of voters was not required to be filed in the office of the Clerk of the Peace until the 1st day of October, before which time the Clerk had ample time to prepare the list without any assistance, and there could be no occasion whatever to hurry the completion of said list except for political purposes, with which this Council can have nothing to do, That the said sum be not allowed."

There is no doubt whatever that the object of employing Mr. Bell was to hurry on the rolls for 1861, with a view to having the same used at the late election.—The Town Clerk is allowed by Statute till the 1st of October to prepare the lists, and is required to certify to the correctness of the same, which he could not well do when part of the work was performed by another. The Assessment Roll was not even completed, a case of appeal being yet pending. The unreasonable haste can, therefore, be attributed only to the anxious desire of certain parties to use this years' rolls, as Mr. Ormond expresses it in his amendment, for "political purposes." The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

For the amendment:—Messrs. Toole, Ormond, McDonald, Eastland & Meanes.—5.

Against the amendment,—and for the payment of the $10:—Messrs. KENNEDY, Bradfield, Maloney, Ryan, Chamberlen and STEVENSON.—6.

Let the rate-payers make a note of this!

Mr. McDonald gave notice that he would at the next meeting of the Council bring forward a By-law to regulate the fees and dues of Inspector of Weights and Measures.

A new Market By-law was read a first time.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Menzies,—That the Treasurer be authorised to pay to the Trustees of the Roman Catholic School the amount ordered to be paid to the individuals who paid it, in the report of the Finance committee of the 18th Jan., as the sum is lawfully due the said Trustees.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

☞ The Cobourg Sentinel says Wednesday next, August 7th, is the day appointed for the grand Opposition oration, to be held in that place.

LIGHTNING RODS.—See the advertisement of Messrs. Piper & Kindall, in our advertising columns.

☞ Another letter from "An old Parochial Schoolmaster of Scotland" unavoidable crowded out. It will appear next week.

COUNTY REGISTRY OFFICE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—The Warden and Messrs. Chamberlen and R. D. Rogers, the County Building Committee, met this week in the County Clerk's office, for the purpose of selecting from several plans sent in one which they might consider best to build a Registry Office after in this County. The County Council had granted $2,000 for that purpose, and the Committee were not to accept of any plan that the erection of an office in accordance therewith would exceed the sum above stated. This the parties submitting plans fully understood, and made their drawings to suit the amount. The building, in accordance with any of the plans submitted by Mr. R. T. Brookes, would not have exceeded that sum, and would have been a good-sized, fire-proof, commodious and neat, but plain edifice.—None of Mr. Brookes' plans, however, were accepted, either owing to the stubborn stupidity of one of the Committee, or through some ill feeling this same person bears to that Architect. Mr. Chamberlen, the only practicable man on the Committee, and a builder by profession, was strongly in favor of one of Brookes' plans; but nothing he could say had any force with this gentleman, who seemed thoroughly to have hood-winked the other good-natured, easy man, and to have brought him into his views. The consequence is, the worst plan submitted has been adopted, and the building, when complete, will be an unsightly object on the beautiful Court House Hill. The interior will be too small, badly arranged, and very little better than the present office, and the exterior will have the appearance of a fantastically absurd gingerbread-looking Pigeon House. Should the Committee not reconsider their decision, the public will see to it that the Ashburnham Councillor and his pliable friend shall, after the expiration of the present year, be elected to stay at home for the better management in future of their own affairs, and to prevent a recurrence of the squandering of our money on useless and fantastic jobs. The Registrar's own plan was one of the best that could have been adopted; and by taking it the amount to be paid to the successful competitor would have been saved, as of course the Registrar would not have accepted of any of the spoils.

S.

Peterboro', 25th July, 1861.

COUNTY REGISTRY OFFICE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—You will oblige me by the publication in your next issue of this and the inclosed letter. The County Building Committee met lately to decide upon the merits of various designs submitted for their approval in response to an advertisement put forth by the Committee inviting Architects to compete for the building of a new Registry Office in this Town. The designs submitted by me were pronounced the most suitable, and would have been adopted but for a statement volunteered by Mr. Sheridan, that I was endeavoring to hoodwink the Committee, for by the adoption of my designs, they would find themselves in the same dilemma as the School Trustees of Lindsay, who, by the adoption of my designs, found themselves committed to an undertaking which would cost double the original estimate made by me. Mr. Sheridan further stated that he made the above statement on the authority and with the sanction of James Dunsford, Esq., M. P. P. Feeling the gross injustice done to me by the Committee, I communicated with the Rev. John Vicars, Chairman of the Lindsay Board of School Trustees, requesting him to lay the matter before Mr. Dunsford, and asking him to give his reply in writing.—The inclosed letter in Mr. Dunsford's reply, and will prove the opposite of the statement made by Mr. Sheridan. I may further, however, state that the Lindsay School Buildings were contracted for at a sum less by $200.00 than my estimate; neither has any Job with which I have been connected cost the amount of my estimate, unless in cases where the work contained in the original drawings has been exceeded, at the request of my employers.

Yours respectfully,
R. T. BROOKES.

Peterboro', July 30, 1861.

Lindsay, 27th July, 1861.

DEAR SIR,—I regret to hear through Mr. Vicars that Mr. Sheridan, the County Clerk, should have thought proper to make assertions in the Council prejudicial to your reputation as an Architect, and introduce my name as an authority for such assertions. I beg to say that nothing ever transpired between myself and Mr. Sheridan which justified him in using my name as an authority for any assertion or statement of the kind. Moreover, I beg distinctly to assert that I have no personal knowledge of any transaction in which you may have been engaged in your professional capacity as an Architect, which would warrant my saying that you were in any way incompetent, or unworthy of the confidence of your employers. Nor have I the slightest wish, or desire, or grounds, in fact, for stating that which might prejudice your reputation or career.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,
J. W. DUNSFORD.

R. T. Brookes, Esq.,
Architect, Peterboro'.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—You will oblige me by inserting in to-morrow's issue the inclosed notes from Charles Perry, Esq., and Mr. Yorke. I am able fully to corroborate the statement in Mr. Perry's note, and am convinced that Mr. Weller will never approve of the plans for the Registry Office adopted by Messrs. Dean and Rogers, two of the Building Committee. In fact he cannot do so, as the Office, if built after Mr. Carlisle's design, will be contrary to the Statute, almost useless as a Registry Office, an eye-sore on the hill, and a disgrace to the County. Mr. Yorke's letter speaks for itself,—that a capital Registry Office can be built for the money granted by the Council. In conclusion, it is to be hoped that the Committee will re-consider the matter, and put up a respectable and useful building.

Yours, &c.,
W. RUBIDGE.

Peterboro', July 31, 1861.

Peterborough, July 31, 1861.

DEAR SIR,—From the conversation I was present at and heard between yourself and Charles A. Weller, the Clerk of the Peace, I am satisfied that Mr. Weller was surprised that the Committee had accepted the worst plan for a Registry Office submitted, and that he strongly disapproved of it.

Yours, &c.,
CHARLES PERRY,
Mayor.

W. Rubidge, Esq.,
Deputy Registrar.

Peterborough, July 30, 1861.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your enquiries as to the cost of a Registry Office, to be built after any of the plans submitted by Mr. Brookes, I beg to state that I have already informed Mr. Chamberlen and Mr. Rogers that I could build an Office in accordance with any one of Mr. Brookes' designs for the sum limited by the Council. I at the same time inform

The American Revolution.

MORE DETAILS OF THE LATE BATTLE.

Washington, July 26.

Several New York regiments have re-enlisted for the war.

The fortifications about Washington are fast being mounted with heavy guns.

Our outposts are again being gradually moved in the direction of the rebels.

The Cabinet had a protracted session today, lasting more than four hours.

The World's correspondent says that a letter has just been received from Savannah, Ga., which states that a general gloom pervades affairs there.

Mr. John Owens, the most talented lawyer of the place, has become insane over the condition of the country. He was a strong Union man.

A soldier of the 69th regiment arrived here to-night, having escaped from Manassas, where he was held as prisoner. He says the rebels had many prisoners who were closely confined; many of them died. He had little or no opportunity to see much, but fully confirms the reports. They look rough. Some are wounded and about half of them have nothing but a shirt and pantoon. They look as though they had seen service, and confirm the reports of the immense rebel loss. The official reports of the 1st Michigan shows that they lost one-third of their officers and one-fifth of their men.

It appears on investigation in official quarters that the number of killed in the late battle is constantly being reduced, until today it amounts to only one hundred and fifty.

A large number of our troops which were taken prisoners were placed among the killed.

A private letter from Virginia, which has been received here, reports that the rebel loss was between 1,000 and 1,500.

Gen Ephraim Hunter, of Prince William county, was killed, making the fourth General lost by the enemy.

Large numbers of heavy boat howitzers here, with immense shell guns, having been recently mounted around Alexandria. Over 100 trained seamen are detailed to work them.

Several vessels are busily engaged in transporting heavy timber for fortifications along the heights above Alexandria as well as shot and shell, &c.

The Baltimore came up last night from Mathia Point. Every thing was quiet and no signs of batteries could be seen.

The Tribune's despatch says: It has been ascertained that some 200 are yet missing from the Minnesota Regiment.

☞ The Northern papers acknowledge to the capture of 23 vessels by privateers. The Southerners say they have taken fifty-one prizes, worth $3,000,000.

☞ The Nightingale Fund, for the training of hospital nurses, according to a report made to the War Office, the sum of £1,436,

THE LATE COL. JAS. CAMERON.

The country mourns the loss of the gallant Camerouns chieftain—the Colonel of the New York Seventy-ninth Highlanders who fell at the head of his regiment in the bloody battle of Sunday last. Col. Cameron was a man of dauntless valor, of a sterling and generous spirit, high personal honor, and fine intellectual parts—at once a gentleman, a Christian, and a hero. He had also the most commanding physical proportions, a dignified presence and a noble countenance. Like his brother, the Secretary of War, he had been a printer, a journalist, and a lawyer; and had also taken an active part in forwarding the agricultural and railroad interests of Pennsylvania, his native State. In military affairs he had always taken great interest, having for years commanded a regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers. Latterly, however, he had retired from active life to his beautiful estate on the banks of the Susquehanna, intending to pass the remainder of his days in peaceful quiet. Only about a month ago he was induced to accept the command of a thousand patriotic and gallant Highland clansmen from this city, natives of the land of his sires, which he loved so warmly and well. The chief fear of his friends was that on the battle field he would be too heedless of his own life, and those forebodings have been sadly realized. In his very first charge he fell—fell like a hero, with his face to the foe. At the head of his valiant Highlandmen he dashed into the thickest of the fray, and shouting the inspiring war-cry, "Scots! follow me!" he passed from the gory battle-field to Paradise. —N. Y. Times.

SOUTHERN SHARP SHOOTERS.

It has been received upon sufficient authority that the commanders of the insurgents have availed themselves of the skill, as general in the South, in the use of the rifle, for the organization of sharp shooting companies attached to each regiment; and that these men are directed to select as their targets the officers of the National army. Some evidence of the truth of the story may be found in the affair of Sunday. The number of officers killed and injured is out of all proportion to the number of the rank and file, showing that the enemy had not used their weapons indiscriminately. To the efficiency of these practiced marksmen may also be ascribed another circumstance, which has excited surprise, namely, the fact that nearly every horse of the artillery trains was shot; and that, for this reason, the guns had to be left behind.—

WAR NOT A SPECTACLE.

One of the most repulsive features of the late advance of our army into Virginia was the large number of civilians who accompanied it. We are told that not less than a thousand persons having no military employment went from the city of Washington in the wake of the troops to witness the expected battle. Only a few of them, who were connected with leading journals as correspondents, had any business or call to be there, and went purely from motives of curiosity. Congressmen, clerks of the government, hotel visitors, and it is said, a multitude of secessionists among them, crowded the thoroughfares, as they do in England on Derby Day, or as in our country parts the rural people flock to a "general training." The scene was disgraceful in the extreme. The sight of a great battle-field is one of the most dreadful that is ever presented to human eyes, and we cannot envy the sensibilities of those who rushed to it as they would to a spectacle in a theatre. But apart from the brutality of the incident, it appears to have been a main cause of the serious disasters of Sunday afternoon. Our noble soldiers had already made themselves virtual masters of the position; they had carried three of the heaviest batteries, had silenced others, and were prepared to advance upon the remainder, or at least to hold their advantages, when a senseless panic was produced among the teamsters by a charge of cavalry. This was immediately communicated to the large number of civilians, who spread their terror among the straggling soldiers wherever they passed. They destroyed the confidence of the soldiers in our successes, and turned what would have been a triumph, shortly, into a defeat.—Post.

THE LATE Mr. BRAIDWOOD, SUPERINTENDENT OF THE LONDON FIRE BRIGADE.

The melancholy and dreadful death of Mr Braidwood has created great sympathy in Edinburgh, of which city he was a native, and where he first distinguished himself in the management of fires. Mr. Braidwood was the son of a cabinet-maker in the Scotch capital, and was born there about the year 1800. In 18.4 he joined the police establishment there, and undertook the organization of a regular fire brigade. Before his plans were far advanced, and before he had either his force or engines in working order, occurred the great conflagration of 1824, the most memorable and extensive fire in the annals of Edinburgh, and in which a great part of the High-street, including the steeple of the Tron Church, was burnt down. At this fire Mr Braidwood first exhibited those qualities of cool determination, great daring, and skillful management which he has so often put to good purpose in the fires of the metropolis. A pamphlet which he published in 1832, on the causes and means of extinguishing fires, gave him more than local celebrity, and led to his removal to London, where he was offered the situation of Superintendent of the London Fire Brigade, which he excepted, and retained during the long period of thirty years. Many stories are still told of the intrepidity and presence of mind he displayed during the eight years he was fire-master at Edinburgh. On one occasion he carried first one barrel of gunpowder, and then another, through the midst of a fire from a cellar through an ironmonger's shop, thus preventing, at the utmost personal risk, an explosion which might have caused great destruction of life and property. On another occasion, above 30 years ago, he narrowly escaped the sad fate which ultimately befell him, being struck by some of the fragments of a falling roof, in consequence of which he was so much injured that he had to be removed from the scene. Mr Braidwood may be said to have left to his native city the legacy of a well-appointed and well-organized brigade, his plans having been fully matured before he left, and since that time carried out. The city of London Rifle Brigade, of which the late Mr. Braidwood was an honorary member, have resolved to attend his funeral, and the society of Lloyd's have presented a handsome donation to his widow.

☞ It is reported that the Postmaster General, Hon. Sidney Smith, since his defeat in West Northumberland, has resigned his office. A strange fatality would seem to be connected with members who fill this office. In 1854, the then Postmaster-Gen was defeated in Lambton by Mr. Brown; in 1857, the Hon Mr. Spence was defeated by Mr. Notman, and Mr. Cockburn has, during the present election, unseated the Hon Sidney Smith.—Transcript.

BANK OF UPPER CANADA.

If we had stopped to think that we shouldn't be likely to get a perfectly reliable report in any of the Toronto papers of the last annual meeting of the Bank of Upper Canada, held in that city, we should have taken the trouble to send a reporter to Toronto. We make this remark because we notice in one of the country papers a statement of much significance, evidently given on the authority of some shareholder who was present. This is the substance. A shareholder asked information about the one hundred thousand pounds sterling protested Grand Trunk Bill of Exchange, of which so much had been said by the public press? Mr. Cassels replied that he found no account of it in the books; and Mr. Cayley added, the less said on that point the better, as the Bank was not liable. Here is a new and we must confess to us startling development. Mr. Cayley is in direct contradiction to Mr. Galt. One explanation is given to the shareholders at the annual meeting; another in Parliament and to the public at large. All mention of the remarks made at the meeting is suppressed in the Toronto papers, one of them being under the influence of the Government, another under the influence of the Bank. We noticed that Mr. Cassels in his report stated the Grand Trunk debt to be $833,000, while we had understood it, on information which we believed was unquestionable, between $1,200,000 and $1,300,000. We were naturally at a loss to conceive how so great a reduction could have been made, but believing Mr. Cassels to be a man of integrity, we did not call his statement in question. The hundred thousand pounds sterling protested bill would just about make the difference. Can it be possible that simply leaving it out of the accounts, without a word of explanation, after Mr. Galt's statement in Parliament, and his still more precise and avowedly authorised statement in the Sherbrooke Leader, is the way in which Mr. Cassels makes the Grand Trunk debt due to the Bank $883,000? The Bill was endorsed by the Bank, and it is impossible to believe that it was not protested in due form by the London Financial Agents of the Canadian Government. We are not in a position to compel explanation. We can only point out where explanation is required; and use what public pressure is within our power to have the necessary question asked in Parliament. If there has been no deception, if the bill has been liquidated, if the Grand Trunk liability to the Bank is $883,000 instead of thirteen hundred thousand dollars, we shall be delighted. We desire to find the accounts of the Bank in which the Government has over a million dollars deposited, in the most satisfactory state, and we cannot have the slightest feeling against the shareholders—only we wish to find realities; we do not wish to be humbugged by cooked or delusive statements. We do not believe that any public or private interest, any more than the cause of public morality, is to be promoted by a course so criminal. Mr. Robert Cassels has publicly lectured the Montereal papers for their course in reference to this Bank. We promise him that one of them will carefully and closely watch the progress of events, and painstakingly exculpate him from any seeming censure to which the present imperfect depolopment of facts gives rise, upon a clear record shown; or on the other hand, tell him, a little more in detail, the kind of conduct expected from an officer of a public institution, of his character and position.

MADELINE SMITH.

It will be remembered that some time since there was a great excitement throughout the land, occasioned by a charge of the most serious nature being brought against a young lady of Glasgow, named Madeline Smith. She was put upon her trial for poisoning her sweetheart, a French teacher, but after a long investigation was declared, in Scotch legal phrase, to have been "not proven." It was said this young lady immediately afterwards was sent to Australia, where it was hoped that amongst the great family of the Smiths, her name would be altogether lost, and that she would be able to retrieve her position. However, she has lately turned up in the neighborhood of Plymouth. A great deal has been done here of late in the way of houses for fallen women; and one of the clerical gentlemen who have been very prominent in this peculiar business, has had a fascinating young lady in his house and under his care, from whom it was said he was receiving £200 per annum. This syren, like the famous ladies of old, shot her arrows into many a heart, but all the young gentlemen who came near her were mysteriously cautioned not to be entangled. But where is the man who could withstand the blandishments of youth, beauty, and coquetry? Half a score of the sterner sex were struck to the senses by her in no time. Although she was permitted to see society, and went to church on all proper occasions, she was, as we are informed, never formally introduced. Still the want of that formality was no want to her, as is proved by the fact that during the present week she has left our home circle and gone away to be married to an inspired lover of the fine arts—to whom we wish all health and happiness in his new position.—

NOVEL EXCURSION TO SEE THE "GREAT EASTERN."

Three young men, Henry Phillips, Arch. Cassills, and James Roy, belonging to this city, undertook a pleasure-trip to Quebec to see the Great Eastern, in a small sail-boat, or rather skiff. They set sail at 8 o'clock, last Tuesday morning, and reached Sorel at 4 p. m., where a terrible storm overtook them. Leaving that place next morning at 6 o'clock, they arrived off Three Rivers at noon, and at 10 p. m., were only 20 miles from Quebec. Embarking again on Thursday at 6 a. m., they finished their journey in two hours, having had to row 10 miles of the way. Their craft was 15 feet long, by 3 ft. 9 in. across; and we may remark that the trio of excursionists are teetotalers — two of them being office-bearers in the "United" Band of Hope.—Montreal Witness.

☞ The Indians living near the Mosie have sent a petition to the Government setting forth that the whole tribe is in great distress from want of food. From other advices we gather that the famine is truly extreme, and that the Indians have been reduced even to cannibalism. Supplies of flour, pork, &c., as well as of gunpowder and shot, are said to be sent down to-day, to the value of about $200, which will relieve the distress. Mr. Halliday, the lessee of the fisheries on the river Mosie, has undertaken to see to the distribution.

EMIGRATION PORTS.—It appears from the Emigration Commissioner's Annual Report, just published, that during the year 1860, 83,774 emigrants sailed from Liverpool, while only 11,798 left from London, 4,315 from Plymouth, 2,187 from Southampton, 777 from Bristol, and 150 from other English ports; 2,940 from Glasgow, 720 Greenock, and 212 from other Scotch ports; 21,882 from Cork, 6,117 from Galway, 2,305 from Londonderry, and 219 from other Irish ports.

OFFICIAL TYRANNY.

Mr. Harstone, the Postmaster of Baltimore, has actually been dismissed by the defeated Postmaster General. Mr. Harstone's brother, who has been Postmaster at Roseneath, has been displaced for giving his vote against the Government. The inevitable result will be that when the present Government goes out, Mr. Cockburn will procure the reinstatement of these officers, and might, if he followed Mr. Smith's bad example, procure the dismissal of other postmasters who voted against him. Then we shall have inaugurated the American doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils.—Globe.

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But it it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations.—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

...G CHING HORSES.

...re are few things more aggravating ...e driver in a hurry to go to some place, and hungry,great trouble to catch a horse. ...r sometimes sends the assertion that ...ch I raise will never be hard to catch unless some one else spoils him. The way I manage is to keep them gentle from colts, handling them as often as convenient. When young horses are to gone give them salt occasionally, and let them fondle about you, making as little show of trying to get hold of them as possible. There is nothing more to spoil a horse forever than running as if trying to ham him in, and yelling at him authoritatively or scoldingly—when he sees, just as well as you know, that he is out of your reach. To put on the cap sheaf when him severely for causing trouble, and my word for it the next time you want to catch him he will not listen to the voice of your charming, charm you ever so wimply."

Horses learn a great deal by signs. In beginning to teach them to be caught, go towards them on the near side, slowly and cautiously, making no demonstrations at all. If the animal begins to walk off, stop and whistle, or otherwise manifest indifference until he becomes quiet again, then approach as before. When you are so close as to be confident that he will not escape you, speak kindly and hold up one hand ready to touch him on the withers, and thence pass it along the neck until you can get hold of his head, but do not seize him with a grab as this tends to excite fear afterwards. By practicing this course, using the sign, viz: holding up the hand when you are a little further away, each time, a horse may be taught to be caught, even when in considerable glee (playing) simply by holding up the hand and using some familiar phrase, such as whoa, boy, &c. By way of caution, however, watch his actions and intentions closely during his tutoring, and if at any time or from any cause you see that he is going to run, do not by any means say anything or hold up your hand, as the sign given and disobeyed a few times will almost inevitably prevent your making anything out of it in future.—Correspondent Valley Farmer.

SALT FOR SWINE.

A correspondent of the Annalder Landwirthschaft states some interesting experiments to test the use of salt in fattening swine. He selected two pairs of barrow hogs weighing 200 lbs. a piece. One pair received with their daily allowance of food two ounces of salt; the other pair, none. In the course of the week it was easily seen that the salted pair had a much stronger appetite than the others, and after a fortnight the salt was increased to two ounces a-piece. After four months the weight of the salted hogs was 350 lbs. a piece, while that of the unsalted, five weeks later, reached only 300 lb. This experiment was repeated with almost the same results. The author feeds young pigs, according to their age, a quarter to one ounce daily, breeding sows very little during pregnancy, and during the heat of summer withholds it to a great degree from all, as it induces thirst, and liability to disease.

USES OF THE SUN-FLOWER.

The editor of the N. O. Bulletin urges his readers to plant the sun-flower in their gardens, for the purpose of preventing fevers: "Lieut. Maury's experiments and conclusions have been tested by many planters, and we have frequently seen certificates from the latter to the surprising effects of this simple method of warding off febrile complaints, in the spring and summer, from localities subject to them. We suggest, therefore, to all persons living in the outskirts of the city, and those having gardens, residing in it, the propriety of planting abundantly seeds of the sun-flower. It has a showy kind of beauty, and is desirable in that respect, contrasting well by its brilliant yellow crown, with roses and other flowers; add to this its power to absorb the noxious vapors which arise from the earth, and which are supposed to produce fevers, and its combined advantages are entirely sufficient to cause it to be planted extensively in every garden."

HOW TO GET RID OF BOWLDERS.

One of the easiest ways to get rid of large bowlders, or "hard-heads," as they are called in some parts of the country, is to sink them. If not wanted for wall building, it will cost more to drill and blast and haul away, than it will to dig a pit and tumble them in, so that the upper surface will be at least a foot under ground and out of the way of plowing. Examine the stone and select the lower or most favorable side and dig a pit, going partly under the stone, and deep enough so as to be sure to have room, and then with crow-bars, lever, or crank to tumble the stone into the pit and level the dirt over, and you will be surprised to see how cheaply you have got rid of a troublesome occupant of your [illegible]. A man will [illegible] could not be hired and hauled [illegible] $5. —N. Y. Tribune.

GROWTH OF ANIMALS.—Man [illegible] for 20 years, and lives 80 or 100. [illegible] eaches for eight years, and lives [illegible]. The horse grows for 5 years, and lives 25. The ox grows for 6 years and lives 15 or 20. The lion grows for 4 years, and lives 15 or 20. The dog grows 2 years and lives 12 or 15. The cat grows for 1½ yrs. and lives 9 or 10 years. The hare grows for 1 year, and lives 8 years. The guinea pig grows for 7 months, and lives 6 or 7 years.

PEELING POTATOES.—All the starch in potatoes is confined very near the surface; the heart contains but little nutriment.—Ignorance of this fact may form a plausible excuse for those who cut off thick peelings in paring potatoes for mashing; but none of those who know better. Circulate the injunction, "pare thin the potato skin."—Scientific American.

☞A grape vine planted by Napoleon at St. Helena, has been carefully preserved by an Englishman, Col. Palmer, and by him presented to the governor of the Hotel of the Invalids, in Paris. It is in a very handsome condition.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an immediate trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness, and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the
"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"
have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x38 inches, entitled,
"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,
"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL,"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder, postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tascosa, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which you thirsty drank, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes defiled and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the bilious seeds of disease, and thereby renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sound, cleansing and reconstituting the vital organs.

Rememer indeed, it is to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

From the value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek!

For Fever and Ague of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Indians, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Discovery" of the Aztecs.

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Pamphlet Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, SAINT VITUS' DANCE, OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will we found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it sluggish or obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life diseased, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly through ignorance, but alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of those have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often contain no preparation whatever. Hence, butter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall restore to the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of throat and Lung Complaint that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recite the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF
Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood,

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on, but call for Ayer's, and take no other. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

Ormond & Gilmour, Wm. Coulter, and W. A. Kempt, Peterboro'; G. Britton, Lindsay; E. Gregory, Hillsburgh; A. Goodfellow, Springville, and all medicine dealers. Northrop & Lyman, General Agents for the Canadas.

THE TRAVELLERS REST.

THE above named House has been enlarged re-fitted and refurnished and has every convenience for the accomodation of the travelling public. It is directly opposite the Post Office, on Main Street, and within sight of the steamboat landing.

Health and its Pleasures,

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES
CROSSES BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice
Billious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,
Consumption,	Scrofula, or King's Evil
Debility,	Sore Throats,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Dysentery,	Secondary Symptoms,
Erysipelas,	Tic-Douloureux,
Female Irregularities,	Tumours,
Fevers of all kinds,	Ulcers,
Fits,	Venereal Affections,
Gout,	Worms of all kinds,
Head-ache,	Weakness from whatever cause,
Indigestion,	&c., &c.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London" are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotal in Canada

Poetry.

BURY ME IN THE MORNING.

BY STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS.

Bury me in the morning, mother,
O, let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere you leave me alone with the night,
Alone in the night of the grave, mother,
'Tis a thought of terrible fear—
And you will be alone, mother,
And stars will be shining here,
So bury me in the morning, mother,
And let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere I'm alone with the night.

You tell me of the Saviour's love mother,
I feel it in my heart—
But oh! from this beautiful world, mother
The hard for the young to part;
Forever to part, when here, mother,
The soul is fain to stay;
For the grave is deep and dark, mother,
And heaven seems far away,
They bury me in the morning, mother,
And let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere I'm left alone with the night.

The Grandmother of a Queen.

On a day in which April gave her coming sister, May, the "delicate compliment of imitation," when the hedge-rows were blooming all over England, and the violets and celandines, the daisies and wild hyacinths, were showing their modest heads, a young girl was wending her way towards the great city of London. Slenderly clad, and having no shoes or stockings upon her small white feet, she tripped along as if the stones had no power to hurt anything so beautiful. The girl's face was young and blooming, and her limbs had that rare quality of motion, which is still characteristic of rustic maidens.

A happy and contented smile beamed upon her lips, as if she were at peace with all the world, notwithstanding the fact that it had not bestowed upon her any remarkable wealth—her whole future being wrapped up, at that moment, in a very small checkered handkerchief, which she carried as a bundle on her head to screen it from the too fervid rays of the sun.

She sat down in a green lane which turned off from the high road, and paused the hour of noon. A piece of bread, a few leaves of sorrel, and a little water in the hollow of her hand, from the brook that ran beneath the trees seemed sufficient refreshment. She bathed her pretty feet, wiping them with dried grass of last year's growth, and laying hands, arms and neck, in the same ample basin, and wetting her luxurious hair, she set off again upon her solitary way, singing blithely as she went.

No one spoke to, or annoyed her, altho' many looked a second time at the brilliant complexion and soft blue eyes, so typical of the Kentish beauty. At length as the twilight was approaching, she began to weary of her long walk, and stopped before a small inn.

The landlord sat upon a bench beside the door, under a large lime-tree, with a fresh filled tankard by his side, and as the girl paused before him he good-naturedly bade her a op and rest herself, and take some refreshment.

"Thank you kindly, sir," she replied, "I have no money to pay for it; but I should be very glad of rest. I am going to London."

"To London," said he, "and without money? You are crazy, young woman.—How do you expect to live there without money?"

"Please you, sir, I shall go to a place," she replied.

"Ah! that is it. Well, sit down at this table, said the host, leading her into a room where some guests were just departing, "and eat as much as you please."

The girl could not resist the invitation, though not without some feeling of shame at taking food at a tavern without paying for it; but the landlord helped her so bountifully, and the food tasted so good after her scanty dinner of bread and water that she made a hearty meal.

After her abundant supper, he proceeded to say that his servant had left him, and he would be glad to supply her place with such a pleasant looking girl as herself; and unless she had had offers in London superior to what the Blue Dragon could present, he wished she would stay with him.

Anne was delighted at the proposition and readily accepted it, and as soon as her tired feet became rested she was the life and soul of the Blue Dragon——the Egeria of that inexhaustable fountain of home-brewed, which the good-humoured landlord kept for his ever thirsty guests.

Among these guests was a rich brewer, who fancied that his own ale tasted better at the Blue Dragon than elsewhere, especially after the pretty bar maid had come, to whom he directed particular attention. He saw that she was neat, modest, and sprightly, carrying herself in her exposed situation with a delicacy and dignity that well became her, while it did not prevent her from being pleasant and agreeable to the guests.

At the end of three months the brewer proposed marriage.

Anne's calm blue eyes opened wide. She had never thought of such a sequel to the pleasant good mornings which the brewer had constantly bestowed on her; but now that he had spoken, she clearly saw the possibility of such an event taking place.

The kind landlord was delighted at the ending of his good scheme to assist a poor girl, and took full credit to himself for the event. He was only sorry for loosing her bright and cheerful presence that made such sunshine in the old inn; but, as it had turned out well for Anne, he had not a word to say. He gave her a grand wedding and she was installed in the brewer's house, carrying the sunshine there also.

While the brewer lived, she presided over it with a soft, sweet, lady-like decorum that disarmed all sarcasm upon the wealthy brewer's choice. But this was not long. Anne was called early to mourn over the loss of him who had bestowed upon her his love and wealth, and one did mourn with a tenderness and grief that showed how much she respected his memory.

There was another wooing before time had even touched the cheek of the young and beautiful widow with a single icy finger, and this time she was raised still higher.—Sir Thos Aylesbury, a man high in the king's confidence and esteem, and holding high and responsible offices—a man, too, who possessed a fine landed estate—was among the many who aspired to her hand. She accepted him, and at the same time disappointed many others, to whom her youth, beauty, and wealth would have made a desirable prize. She lived with him long and happily. Children were born to them, whose beauty, worth and talents reflected honour upon their parents, and brought them into notice in the world.

Frances Aylesbury was like her mother—handsome, quick, and talented. Her lot it was to increase the family honours, and this was the way in which it was brought about:

Some of the distant relatives of the brewer, Anne's first husband, began to dispute her right to his estate, and carried their imaginary claims to a court of law. She was advised to consult Edward Hyde, a young man whose rising promise was fast ripening into fruit.

In the long siege of legal embarrassments and delays consequent upon this, Lady Aylesbury visited the office of the young barrister a great many times, and was often accompanied by her daughter. The young folks fell in love, and although the young man had no fortune, Sir Thomas overlooked this, in consideration of his near relationship to Sir Nicholas Hyde, and the prospect of his attaining to eminence in his profession.

Troubles came to the throne and state. The king raised his standard in Nottingham, and Sir Thomas Aylesbury joined his cause. He was set down as a malignant by the Roundheads, his hall was burnt, and, after many hair-breadth escapes, he fled to Antwerp. He died at Breda, 1657, at the age of 81, bequeathing all his property to Frances, wife of Edward Hyde.

After the execution of the King, Hyde remained in the Island of Jersey, writing the history of the Stuarts. He was active at the Restoration, was created Earl of Clarendon, and afterwards became Lord Chancellor.

Faster and faster came the honours of the family of whom the pretty bar-maid was the foundress. Anne Hyde, daughter of Lord Clarendon and Frances Aylesbury, was married to the young Duke of York, afterwards James II., King of England; and thus the barmaid of a country tavern became the grandmother to a queen.

A SOUTHERN PLANTATION.

(Extracts from Russell's letters to the Times.)

The view from the Belvedere was one of the most striking of its kind in the world. If an English agriculturist could see 6,000 acres of the finest land in one field, unbroken by hedge or boundary, and covered with the most magnificent crops of tasselling Indian corn and sprouting sugar-cane, as level as a billiard table, he would surely doubt his senses. But here is literally such a sight. Six thousand acres, better tilled than the finest patch in all the Lothians green as Meath pastures, which can be cultivated for a hundred years to come without requiring manure, of depth practically unlimited, and yielding an average profit on what is sold of it of £20 an acre at the old prices and usual yield of sugar. Rising up in the midst of the verdure are the white lines of the negro cottages and the plantation offices and the sugar-houses, which look like large public edifices in the distance.—And who is the lord of all this fair domain? The proprietor of Houmas and Orangery ore is a man, a self-made one, who has attained his apogee on the bright side of half a century, after 25 years of successful business.

The rich Mississippi bottoms need no manure—a rotation of maize with cane affords them the necessary recuperative action. The cane of last years' plant is left in stubble, and renews its growth this Spring under the title of ratoons. When the maize is in tassel, cow-peas are dropped between the rows, and when the lordly stalk of which I measured many 12 and even 15 feet in height—bearing three and sometimes four ears—is topped to a mit the ripened sun, the pea-vine twines itself around the trunk, with a profusion of leaf and tendril that supplies the planter with the most desirable fodder for his mules in "rolling time" which is their season of trial. Besides this the corn blades are culled and cured.—These are the best meals of the Southern race-horse, and constitute nutricious hay without dust. The cow-pea is said to strengthen the system of the earth for the digestion of a new crop of sugar-cane. A sufficient quantity of the cane of last season is reserved from the mill and laid in pits, where the ends of the stalk are carefully closed with earth until Spring. After the ground has been plowed into ridges, these canes are laid in the endless tenuli, and not long after their interment, a fresh sprout springs at each joint of these inforindable flutes.

As we ride through the wagon roads, of which there are no less than 30 miles in this confederation of four plantations, held together by the purse and the life of our host the unwavering exactitude of the rows of cane, which runs without deviation at right angles, with the river down to the canebreak, two miles off, proves that a negro would be a formidable rival in a ploughing match. The cane has been "laid by"—that is, it requires no more labor, and will soon "lap" and close, though the rows are 7 feet apart. It feathers like a palm top; a stalk which was cut measured six feet, although from the ridges it was but waist high. On dissecting it near the root, we find five nascent joints not a quarter of an inch apart. In a few weeks more these will shoot up into a spy-glass pulled out to its focus.

There are four lordly sugar-houses, as the grinding mills, boiling, and chrystalizing buildings are called, and near each is to be found the negro village, or "quarter" of that portion of the plantation. A wide avenue generally lined with trees, runs through these hamlets, which consist of 20 or 30 white cottages, single storied, and divided into four rooms. They are whitewashed, and at no great distance might be mistaken for New England villages, with a town hall which often serves in the latter form "meeting house," with occasionally a row of stores on the ground floor.

The people, or "hands" are in the fields and the only inhabitants of the settlements are scores of "peaninnies," who seem a jolly congregation, under the care of crones who here, as in Indian villages, act as nurses of the rising generation destined from their births to the limits of a social Procrustean bed. The increase of property on the estate is about five per cent. per annum by the birth of children.

We ride an hour before coming upon any "hands" at work in the fields. There is an air of fertile desolation that prevails in no other cultivated lands. The regularity of the cane, its gardenlike freedom from grass or weeds, and the ad unguem finish and evenness of the furrows, would seem the work of nocturnal fairies, did we not realize the old system of "gang labor" exemplified at a field we at length reached, where some thirty men and women were giving with the hoe the last polish to the earth, around the cane, which would not be molested again until gathered for the autumnal banquet of the rolling mills.

Small drains and larger ditches occur at almost every step. All those flow into a canal, some 15 feet wide, which runs between the plantation and the uncleared forest, and carries off the water to a "bayou" still more remote. There are 20 miles of deep ditching before the plantation, exclusive of the canal, and as this is the contract work of "Irish navvies," the sigh with which our host alluded to his heavy item in plantation expenses, was expressive. The work is too severe for African thews, and experience has shown it a bad economy to overtask the slave. The sugar-planter lives in apprehension of four enemies. These are the river when rising drought, too much or unreasonable rain, and frost. The last calls into play all his energies, and tasks his utmost composure. In Louisiana the cane never ripens as it does in Cuba, and they begin to grind as early in October as the amount of juices will permit. The question of a crop is one of early or late frosts.—With two months' exemption they rely, in a fair season, upon a hogshead of 1,200 lbs to the acre, and if they can run their mills until January, the increase is more than proportionate, each of its latter days in the earth adding saccharine virtue to the cane.

At an average of a hogshead to the acre each working hand is good for seven hogsheads a year, which, at last year's prices, 8c. per lb. for ordinary qualities, would be a yield of £140 per annum for each full good hand.

Two hogsheads to the acre are not unfrequent, and even three have been produced upon rich lands in a good season.—Estimating the sugar at 70 per cent. and the refuse, bagasse, at 30 per cent. the latter figure would give us two tons and a quarter to the acre, which opens one's eyes to the tireless activity of nature in this semi-tropical region.

From the Records of Houmas, I find that in 1857, the year of its purchase at about £300,00, it yielded a gross of $304,000, say £63,000 upon the investment.

In the rear of the great plantation there are 18,000 additional acres of cane brake, which are being slowly reclaimed, like the fields now rejoicing in crops, as fast as the furnance of the sugar-house calls for fuel. Were it desirable to accelerate the preparation of this reserve for planting, it might be put in tolerable order in three years at a cost of £15 per acre. We extend our ride into the jungle, on the borders of which, in the unfinished clearing, I saw plantations of negro corn, the sable cultivators of which seem to have disregarded the symmetry practised in the fields of their masters, who allow them from Saturday noon until Monday's cockcrow for the care of their private interests, and, in addition to this, whatever hours in the week they can economise by the brisk fulfilment of their allotted tasks.—Some of these patches are sown broadcast, and the corn has sprung up like Zouave tirailleurs in their most fantastic vagaries, rather than like the steady regimental drill of the cane and maize we have been traversing.

Corn, chickens and eggs are from time immemorial the perquisites of the negro, who has the monopoly of the two last-named articles in all well-ordered Louisiana plantations. Indeed, the white man cannot compete with them in raising poultry, and our host was evidently delighted when one of his negroes, who had brought a dozen Muscovy ducks to the mansion, refused to sell them to him except for cash. "But Louis, won't you trust me? Am I not good for $3?" "Good enough, massa; but dis nigger want de money to buy flour and coffee for him young family. Folks at Donaldsonville will trust massa—won't trust nigger." The money was paid, and, as the negro left us, his master observed, with a sly humorous twinkle, "That fellow sold $40 worth of corn last year, and all of them feed their chickens on my corn, and sell their own."

There are 3 overseers at Homas, one of whom superintends the whole plantation, and likewise looks after another estate of 3,000 acres, some twelve miles down the river, which our host added to his possession two years since, at a cost £150,000. In any part of the world, and in any calling, Mr. S——— (I do not know if he would like to see his name up in print) would be considered an able man. Mr S. attends to most of the practice requiring immediate attention. We visited one of these hospitals and found half-a-dozen patients ill of fever, rheumatism and indigestion, and apparently well cared for by a couple of stout nurses. The truckle bedsteads were garnished with mosquito bars, and I was told that the hospital is a favorite resort, which its inmates leave with reluctance. The pharmaceutical department was largely supplied with a variety of medicines; quinine and preparation of sulphate of iron. "Poor Crugs," said Mr M., "are a poor economy."

THE RED RIVER SETTLEMENT.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE RED RIVERERS.

The Nor' Wester has an amusing article on the Red Riverites. It says:—

"A stranger is always struck with the delightful shyness or mauvaises honte of the Red River people. There are exceptions, to be sure; but, as a rule, they are sweetly modest and unassuming. Take a man of genuine native growth—one whom adventitious circumstances have not warped, and who knows little of the conventionalities of social life, and what an unobtrusive retiring creature! He is speechless in the presence of a stranger—while spoken to he scans his hands and feet with annoying concentration—and feels an astonishing relief when you are gone. Speak to him and he is most courteous—evidently respects himself, yet, in his anxiety to show you respect he almost becomes sheepish himself—from regard to your judgment, or from modest distrust of his own, he will not venture an opinion, but will readily endorse yours, and earnestly hope you may not put him to the necessity of differing from you. All this is the result of isolation—our not mingling with the great, noisy, jostling world. It is no reproach to the people here; but it certainly prevents them from making the appearance they might, and one unacquainted with him might easily mistake it for want of manly spirit. If you meet a Red River settler—no matter who—you are bound to shake hands with him, remark that it is a fine or a bad day, as the case may be, and go into endless details regarding the health of his family, the state of his farm, and the market prospects. These stereotyped subjects must be gone through with all patience and fidelity. You can't dodge them—to use a Yankeeism—you are rigidly kept up to the mark, and you must 'face the music,' with the best grace possible. And if you suddenly find yourself among fifteen or twenty, you must faithfully go the round with "How do you do," "Comment vous portez vous," or "Camwer, kah shin ustuth," as the case may be, shaking hands all the while with the utmost enthusiasm, real or pretended. This constant shaking of hands is by no means limited to equals or acquaintances. Jack Jones meets Governor Mactavish on the king highway, and forthwith stretches out his hand and asks after Mrs. Mactavish's health, with all the sang froid imaginable; and the poor Governor, well knowing this old usage of the place, yields to the promptings of his disposition and responds to Jack's catechising with all the readiness possible under the circumstances. In his progress, Jones meets one who is an utter stranger to him whom he has never seen before. This matters little. He offers his hand with alacrity, and after due reference to the state of the weather and the other etceteras, he passes on, to the amazement, no less than the amusement, of the stranger. We find no fault with this innocent ceremony, but simply point it out as one of the peculiarities of the Red River people."

NICE SOCIETY.

A correspondent of the Nor Wester gives an account of one of the regular trips of the steamer Pioneer down the river to Pembina, in the course of which he says:

"You know, perhaps, that when we started, some 40 or 50 Chippewas from Red River Settlement wanted to get on board to come to Pembina, with the benevolent intention of carrying away a scalp or two from their hereditary enemies the Sioux. Of these 20 got on board and worked their passage through. The origin of the present quarrel, as I gathered it, came about in this way. Some twenty Sioux recently arrived at St. Joseph with a horse which had been stolen by some of their number last winter. While at the village above mentioned, it unfortunately happened that a party of Assiniboines and Chippewas were crossing hard by; and one of the latter, who was intoxicated, went towards the Sioux encampment and fired amongst them, killing one of the number. A general fight ensued, in which seven Chippewas, one Assiniboine and two Sioux were killed. Hence the wish of the Chipewwas for more blood. When within a short distance of Pembina they all painted themselves, put on their goose and hawk feathers, wrapped their red, white and green blankets around them, and sang the war song. Some of their compeers came scampering through the bushes adjoining the Fort and a most unchristianlike shaking of hands ensued. It struck me at the time that this accession to the Pembina Indians would be extremely likely to create a famine among them. And since they landed I learn that two of the Company's cattle have been killed; and the Indians, who are camped in large numbers round the Fort, threaten to take it by storm unless food is supplied them, for they are starving. The news induced Capt. Sharpe to land at Pembina, with the intention of returning at once to your Settlement, in case the service of the troops might be needed."

THE ROYAL CANADIAN RIFLES.

The Nor' Wester says:—

"We mentioned in our last, that although the detachment of the Royal Canadian Rifles stationed here was ordered away, permission was granted to some of them, on their petitioning, to remain here. The following are the names of the non-commissioned officers and privates who have received their discharge:—Color-Sergeant. Jas. Macdonald; Sergeant, Francis Woodrock; Privates, Michael Brennar, Robert Collier, Joshua Cox, Brice Dyrlin, Samuel French, Thomas Franklin, Wm Gunn, John Hayes, George Hooky, John Johnston, P. Keenan, Daniel McVicar, Peter McLoughlin, Wm. Moore, Thomas Purcell, William Savage, Christopher Smith, James Sheehan.

DISGRACEFUL DOINGS IN THE INTERIOR.

A respected friend informs us that an Indian was lately killed at Fort Pelly in a drunken frolic. Liquor had been furnished liberally from that post, and, as might be expected, was accordingly consumed. The result was a general melee, ending in the butchery of one. We say "butchery" for it was literally that. After plunging a knife into him immediately above the stomach, the murderer's ungovernable fury made him inflict nine fearful gashes in the body of his fallen compatriot. If true, this is startling and we have no wish to doubt the statement, for it accords from one who lives in that district. We do not remember, it was at this same Fort Pelly that a French half-breed was stabbed by an Indian last fall in a drunken spree, and had to be sent to the settlement for medical attention. What is the moral of all this? We learn, moreover, that something similar to that took place at Edmonton on the Saskatchewan.

BEECHER ON ENGLAND.

The following extract is taken from a sermon lately preached by the Rev. H. W. Beecher, at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn:—"Which is the strongest throne on the globe to-day? Why, the English, unquestionably; particularly because a noble, virtuous, and illustrous woman sits upon it.—An everlasting answer to those who say that a woman ought not to speak or vote is the fact that the proudest sovereign in the world is Queen Victoria. She dignifies womanhood and motherhood, and she is fit to sit in empire. There is one reason why the English throne is the strongest also, because it is so many-legged. It stands on thirty millions of people. It represents the interests of the masses of its subjects. Another reason why England is the strongest nation, is because it is the most Christian nation, because it has the most moral power. It has more than we have. We like to talk about ourselves; on the Fourth of July we like to fan ourselves with eulogies; but we are not to be compared to-day with old England. I know her surly faults; I know her stubborn conceit; I know how many things are mischevious among her common people, among her operatives of the factory, and among her serfs of the mine; but taking her up on one side and down on the other, there is not another nation that represents so much Christianity as old England. If you do not like to hear it, I like to say it! And the strongest power on the globe to-day is that kingdom. It is the strongest kingdom, and the one that is least liable to be shaken down. England! she has been destroyed every ten or fifteen years from the time of the Armada to the present day, in the prophecies of men.—Every few years she has been about to be overthrown by sea; she has been about to be ploughed up by land; she has been about to be stripped of her resources in India and in other parts of the globe.—Nations have formed alliances against her; the armies and fleets of the civilized world have gone about her; her interests, political and pecuniary, have been repeatedly and violently assailed; and yet she has stood, as she now stands, in stress of the seas, and the strongest power on earth, because she has represented the moral elements."

A CAPTAIN BADLY SOLD.

A gallant volunteer officer was badly sold in Baltimore a few days since. He was searching the houses of citizens for arms, with a squad of men, and on arriving at the house of an old gentleman named Hays, was met in the hall by his daughter—a beautiful black-eyed girl of 18—who appeared deep agitated, and implored the captain not to search the house. The officer was sternly immoveable, resolved to do his duty, and the more bent upon searching from the apparent dismay of the girl. "Indeed, indeed," she exclaimed, "we have only three guns in the house." The captain smiled incredulously. "Fetch them to me," said he, remembering the fate of poor Ellsworth. The young lady hurried up stairs, and returned with an old rusty double barreled shot gun, that no prudent man would have ventured to load and discharge. "The others—the other two!" demanded the officer. "O, sir, my brothers—my brothers!" sobbed the girl, "I cannot take them from them." The captain pushed her aside. "Forward, men!" he shouted, falling into the rear himself. As the file of soldiers hastily mounted the stairs, the lady clung to the skirts of the officer, who was lost to ascend, exclaiming wildly, "but, sir, my brothers, you will not harm my brothers!" The captain shook her off somewhat ungallantly, and rushed up after the soldiers, who had by this time reached the closed door of the chamber. After a pause the men pushed open the door, and rushed in with bayonets fixed when two juvenile Zouaves, of the respective ages of eight and ten years, fully equipped with wooden guns, appeared drawn up in a line before them. At the same time the silvery laugh of the black-eyed beauty was heard on the stairs, echoed by a couple of chamber maids, who were peering over the bannisters from above. The officer beat a hasty retreat without making a seizure of the remaining ones.

GUARANTEES FOR PEACE.

From the St. Catherines Constitutional.

The English papers announce that 650 tons of war stores are now loading from Woolwich Arsenal for Quebec, to be followed by further shipments to Kingston. Several gun boats, it is expected, will also be placed upon the Lakes—within the existing treaty—in order to ensure effectual protection to isolated and defenceless points on our frontiers. It is also stated that 5,000 troops will shortly be sent to our shores, in addition to those already here. These forces, combined with our Active Volunteers, will form an army capable of overwhelming any horde of piratical ruffians who, from motives of plunder, might be induced to attempt an invasion of Canada.—The arrival of these troops will doubtless cause a change in the existing relations.—The Head Quarters of the Royal Canadian Rifles will probably be located in St. Catherines, where it is currently reported the military authorities purpose erecting barracks for 500 men. The position of the Town is considered well adapted as a depot for troops and stores, owing to its close proximity to the American lines, whether a powerful force would be despatched on short notice.

THE OIL DIGGINGS.

Sarnia, July 20, 1861.

Yesterday I went out with a friend from here to Wyoming Station, G. W. R. and from there we went out by stage to Black Creek, a distance of twelve miles, to the "Oil Diggings." The road from the station is one of the most worst description, and almost impassable at either spring or fall, at which seasons the method they take to bring out the oil is rather primitive. At the side of the creek good is what seems to be a wide ditch which is connected in spots and full of a mixture of water and mud, through which they scoop one barrel of oil on a "crotch" of wood—formed like an A—kind of mud sledging. The other day, however, the contract for a plank or gravel road was given out, to run from Wyoming Station to Black Creek at $17,000, which will be finished at the end of the year, and no doubt prove a great benefit to the Township. The country is particularly flat, with a heavy, clayey soil; the water is of a most blackish description, and rather unpleasant. The first well we came to at the Creek was a magnificent one—just begun, and exceedingly prolific. The diggers had gone down fifty-two feet in the earth, and as soon as they got their tank made it was full, and had overflowed a great many barrels ere they were ready. The oil, as it comes into the well through the earth, is mixed somewhat with water, and in order to get the water separated from the oil, they pump the well out into a large tank or vat, let it settle for a day, and then open the spigot at the bottom, the water, being, as a matter of course, at the bottom, runs out first, and then they set to work to fill their barrels with the oil. It is certainly an extraordinary sight to look down fifty or sixty feet into these wells, and see the oil bubbling up in two or three places at once; but the smell is something awful. I put my stick into the tank, and took it out again, dipping with oil, which is exactly of the color of coal tar, and about the consistency of copal varnish, but quite "gritty," on account of the earthy particles it contains, and which are drained off in the refining. There is a refinery just about to commence at Petrolia, about five miles distant from Wyoming, which will save a good deal of freight to the diggers. There are quite a number of boarding houses in the neighborhood, with dining and sitting rooms below, and up stairs there is a bed-room the entire length and breadth of the building, with two tiers of beds, as in the cabin of a steamer. In the bed-room I saw there were beds for forty persons, and all of them were filled, rather nightly, in requisition. One is struck on going out there, by the fact that the bulk of the inhabitants of the oil region who are in the speculation are Americans, and apparently men of a one little means. The men appear to be very healthy, though working hard, and certainly there is no lack of good humor about them. Many are doing well, while others have not succeeded, as was the way in California, but they are not easily discouraged, and try again.

The oil appears to have become quite a feature in G. W. R. trade now, for there are standing on the track quite a number of cars labelled "Oil Car," filled with barrels of oil.

ORIGIN OF "DIXIE'S LAND."

Russel's Times Correspondence.

On landing, the band played "God save the Queen," and "Dixie's Land;" on returning, we had the "Marseillaise" and the National Anthem of the Southern Confederation, and by way of parenthesis, it may be added, that if you do not know the fact, that "Dixie's Land" is a synonym for Heaven. It appears that there was once a good planter named Dixie, who died at some period unknown, to the intense grief of his animated property. They found expression for their sorrow in song, and consoled themselves by clamoring in verse for their removal to the land to which Dixie had departed, and where, probably, the revered spirit would be greatly surprised to find himself in their company. Whether they were illiterate after he died and thus had reason to deplore his removal or merely desired Heaven in the abstract nothing known enables me assert. But Dixie's Land is now generally taken to mean the Southern States, where Mr. Dixie certainly is not at the present writing. The song and air are the composition of the organized African Association for the advancement of music and, their own profit, which sings in New York and it may be as well to add, that in all my tour in the South I heard little melody from lips black or white, and only once heard negroes in the field.

"MORE NICE THAN WISE."

A physician had attended the only child of rich parents, and had, with the aid of Providence, saved the infant's life. A day or two after her darling was pronounced out of danger, the grateful mother visited the man of

REPORT OF THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE FOR THE YEAR 1860.

From the Colonist Star, July 31.

We will give a brief synopsis of the reports of the several agents, or, at least a glance at the most important and interesting of the facts therein recorded.

1. The Addington Road first claims our attention. During the year, 402½ acres were cleared, making an aggregate of 1,610½ acres since the Road was made.—One-third of this is laid down to grass, 293 acres more are cropped, ready for clearing. The total population is 774; increase for the year, 75. There are now 190 actual settlers, who owe 50 horses, 52 yoke oxen, 102 cows, 92 young cattle, 45 sheep and 99 pigs. The total cash value of the farm produce, lumber, manufactures, of the settlement was $34,931 42½. The settlement is also improving in the quality of its buildings. Frame barns and good houses of hewn logs are being erected throughout the settlement; School-houses, saw and grist mills are also in operation. A bridge is now built over the Madawaska river in the Township of Denbigh, and in all probability a flax settlement will be made in a year or two, as there is much good land in the township.

2. The Bobcaygeon Road is next in order; and as it is in our own immediate neighborhood we intend to make very free with Mr Hughes' Report and put our readers in possession of most of the facts which he has presented.

The number of free grant lots on this settlement are 245; on which there are 193 actual settlers, or heads of families, containing altogether 939 individuals. Number of acres cleared, 886; under crop, 618 cropped but not cleared, 204; houses, 187, barns and sheds, 85. Until this year but little stock was kept by settlers, on account of scarcity of feed, but during 1860 a large increase has taken place as follows:—

Horned cattle, 197; horses, 13; pigs 116.

We will now quote directly from the Report:—

Three School Sections have been established, viz.—one at Silver Lake, in Galway; one at Kinmount, and one at Gull River; and the Schools have been well attended.

A Saw Mill was erected during the last summer by Mr. William Gainer, on lot No. 9, free grant, in Minden, and the cost of lumber to settlers has been reduced to one half the original price.

A Grist Mill in connection with the Saw Mill, owned by Mr. John Hunter, at Kinmount, in Somerville, has been built during the past year, so that the settlers on both sides have accommodation in that way for the present.

Five stores have supplied the settlers on the line with most of the comforts of life, and six hotels provide accomodations for travellers, which are found very convenient as lumbering operations are carried on extensively, and large numbers are moving in during the winter with their families.

A subsoil clay has been found in many places, but more plentiful in the valley of Gull River, which has been proved to be excellent for bricks. Crystalized lime stone also exists in abundance, and it is only recently that the settlers have discovered that it makes better lime than that which they have drawn 20 miles.

A very considerable proportion of the lands sold in the new Township has been paid in full, and a general opinion prevails that they are good for crops. But few wish to sell out, and those who do sell go further back, and all obtain good prices for their improvements.

Many of the purchasers are daily passing through this place on their way out to their farms, and all appear to be in good spirits and well satisfied with their prospects.

The Bobcaygeon Road is completed 2 miles beyond the Southern boundary of Stanhope, and about 40 miles from Bobcaygeon. The contractor has been forced to quit work for the present, in consequence of the great depth of snow, but intends to push on the work vigorously in the Spring, and have it completed to Bell's Line by August next.

We may add that the total cash value of the products of this important and rapidly improving settlement for the year 1860 was $30,013 50. The three principal items in this total were 4,450 bushels of wheat, value, $4,895; potatoes 26,610 bushels, value, $6,652 52, and $5,000 worth of Furs.

3. Hastings Road. The total number of settlers on this road is 323, of whom 56 located during the past year. The total number of acres cleared is 2,681, an increase during the year of 1,024. At the close of 1860 there were 336 buildings of every description, shewing the erection of 84 during the year, and of these "the majority are substantial barns and comfortable dwellings, such as will bear favorable comparison with a similar number in any of the front townships." There are 333 horned cattle, 194 hogs, 35 sheep and 69 horses, each item exhibiting a marked increase on the preceeding year. The total value of the year's produce was $35,349.

4. The Severn and Muskoka Road was only opened about two years ago. It runs from the mouth of the Severn, on the north shore of Lake Simcoe, in a north easterly direction to the north-west angle of the township of Draper. From hence a new road has been started, running nearly due east, to connect with the Bobcaygeon Road and ultimately with the Hastings Road, both of which run due north.

The new settlement has already a population of 120, including 41 'actual settlers.' The total number of houses are 15, shanties 37, stables and out-houses 15; of these 12 houses, 12 shanties and 10 stables were built during the past year. The number of acres cleared is 170, and 87 more are chopped. The total cash value of the crops is $2,464 35. The agent recommends the reservation of a village near the Great Falls of Muskoka, either on the east or west side of the river. He says:

There are many natural advantages that must ensure its becoming a centre of business as the diverging roads get settled—together with the superiority of land around in each direction, and its proximity to Muskoka Lake. The vast amount of water power can be easily applied to all practical purposes. Here, too, Peterson's Line, which intersects the other Colonial Roads, will be connected by the Draper Road,and by a further extension, an outlet to Lake Huron will be formed from the Muskoka Road—thus creating a great centre of travel at the Falls. So thoroughly convinced is every one who visits this beautiful and picturesque locality, of its becoming a place of business, that many respectable and enterprising men are determined to settle there when the roads are fully opened—well knowing that the Muskoka Road, from its close connection with Lakes Huron and Simcoe, and the Northern Railroad to Toronto must ultimately be the outlet of an extensive population.

5. The Peterson and Opeongo Road has a peculiar interest, as containing a considerable Prussian element, no fewer than 36 out of a total of 275 having settled in this locality. The township of Renfrew has received this nucleus of a promising addition to our heterogeneous population. Their increase was 22 during the year, and the agent anticipated a large accession to their number in the course of the present year. Some of them "have endured considerable privations since they came to Canada, owing to their poverty, and utter ignorance of the language, and the system of clearing and cultivating land in this country. Now however," continues the agent, "they have learned almost all that is absolutely necessary for them to know upon those points,and seeing how well adapted they are to the wants of the country, I regard their success as certain, and hope and believe that they will be the means of inducing many others of their countrymen to join them here."

We are glad to learn that there is a great probability of a large increase in the English element. There are already a considerable number in this locality. Mr. French the intelligent agent already quoted, speaking of this matter in his report, says—

There are a great many English families settled and doing well in the Township of Bradequit, and the industry, enterprise and perseverance of one of them in particular—Mr. John S. Watson—cannot be too highly spoken of. This gentleman has expended a large sum in the erection of saw and grist mills, which are now in operation, and although they are unequal to the rapidly increasing requirements of the locality in which they are situated, yet are of incalculable benefit to the settlers. To meet, however the growing necessities of the place, Mr. Watson informs me that he intends using steam power in his mills. and this will assuredly be a novel and a pleasing feature in such a thoroughly backwoods settlement.

The number of cleared acres on Dec.31 1860, was 2,623, an increase during the year of 607 acres. The total cash value of the produce on the 1,468 acres under crops was $44,503 24, which shews the average produce of each acre to be $30 32.

"The travel over this road," says Mr. French, "during the past year has far exceeded that of any preceeding year. Since the sleighing has begun, it is not an uncommon thing to see from fifty to seventy-five teams pass my office in a day, on their way to, and returning from the lumber shanties upon the Madawaska and Bonnechere Rivers."

Of the importance of this road to the manufacturers of lumber it is impossible to say for any one not acquainted with the requirements of the trade to form a correct estimate. And then remember ng the great advantages of this trade to the Province, the Opeongo Road was worth the making, even though no settler lived upon it.

The general Report concludes with a brief sketch of the progress of road-making in various parts of the Province, showing a total of 4824 miles of "Colonization Roads' already opened.

CAUTION TO EMIGRANTS.

From the London Prototype.

An emigrant of the name of Jas. Taylor, and his wife and seven children, arrived in this city, yesterday, from Glasgow, via Liverpool to New York, and as he applied to this office to give a sketch of the treatment he received at the hands of the agents, we subjoin a few facts as we received them from Mr. Taylor, who seems to have been swindled wholesale. It appears by the account given us, that Taylor engaged his passage with James Lumsden, of Union Street, Glasgow, an emigrant agent, for £33 15s. sterling, he (Taylor) having been induced to go to the agency by a runner. Lumsden at first wished Mrs. Taylor (her husband being then absent) to hand him £1 sterling ahead, by way of securing the berths. We may mention here that the ages of the children were respectively fourteen, twelve, ten, eight, five, three, and eleven months—the latter was to go free. Lumsden then took the family to the model lodging house, and again asked Taylor's wife to pay the whole passage money. She refused a second time, but finally said she would give him £5 on account. A few days after, the agent called again, and demanded the full fare. Taylor paid the money, received a certificate, and imagined all was right. Lumsden then gave him a letter to M. F. Duffy & Co., 22 Waterloo Road, Liverpool, a passage broker, who, Taylor asserts, changed the certificate, or ticket, as the ages in it are marked twelve, seven, six, five, four, two, and eleven months, and after some delay put them on board the "Webster," with rations for five and a half persons, instead of eight, the original number contracted for. The other steerage passengers only paid at the same time, on board the same ship, £3 6s, which for the entire family, would just amount to £25 5s, leaving the poor man in the first place mulcted out of $7 10s, besides £5 he had already paid as head money—in all, £12 10! To crown the whole, as the family had been entered on the slip as five and a half persons, they had not a sufficient supply of water, and they were actually compelled to buy it, at a cost of £1 sterling! Being booked through to London, C. W., what was their surprise when they were only entered per railway as four fares and a half, and here again they were obliged to pay out their money for the remainder of the family. When will our old country folk learn to; atrocious the route by Quebec, and not suffer themselves to be subjected to open and downright robbery, such as Taylor, an honest, hard-working man, and his small family, have been liable to. Runners and sharpers will gull the public, if they let them do it, with their eyes open; but any one beholding the distress of the poor fellow and his wife would urge upon our Canadian agent in Liverpool to set a staff of honest men to guard the interests and pockets of the poor emigrants who leave the shores of England for this country.

EARTHQUAKE IN OTTAWA.

The vibrations lasted from six to eight seconds, and created intense alarm throughout the entire city. A general rush from the tottering houses was made in all quarters, and in an incredible short space of time the streets were thronged with people, whose frightened look and gestures betokened the wildest alarm and dread. A noise resembling a low rumbling clap of thunder accompanied the shock. In several parts of the city the vibration of the earth was so violent as to crack the walls of the houses, and even overthrow some chimneys. In one of the stores, goods were shaken from the shelves, and several articles of glassware broken.

☞ An ancient Jewish legend says:—There was a city in which the air was so healthy, and so full of the vigor of life, that they who dwelt their never died. This was soon known, both far and wide, and people of birth and fortune hastened thither, and they lived there a long time. In a while, however, people saw them, one after another, stealing away silently that they might be able to die.

PRINCE NAPOLEON AND HIS WIFE IN NEW YORK.

The New York World says:

The arrival of an imperial yacht having on board so many distinguished celebrities in our harbour, led many to visit the battery yesterday to view the beautiful and symmetrical proportions of the vessel, and hoping by chance to catch a glimpse of some of the Imperial tourists. The bay in the vicinity was dotted with small boats containing ladies and gentlemen who desired a closer view of the royal visitors. On going on board of the yacht yesterday, our reporter found that the awnings had been spread over the quarter deck, so that while the rays of the sun were prevented from falling upon the deck, the breeze, if there should be any, would be conducted to the portion of the vessel where the party were enjoying themselves. The quarter deck was in the most perfect order, and was guarded by a half dozen Jack tars neatly attired in the jauntly costume so peculiar to the French navy. Each man wore a sabre bayonet at his side; otherwise there was no appearances of arms on board of the vessel. The iron sofas were placed on deck, and on one was seated the Prince who was smoking a cigar. A tall gentleman who wore the uniform of a naval commander, was in conversation with him. The Imperial cabin is tastefully decorated, the prominent color being green, from the fact that the colors of the Prince are green. A green morocco lounge, a desk of the same color, and a sleeping room hung with green are in his suite of rooms. In the officers' rooms there is a similar disposition of tints. The whole cabin arrangements of the Prince and his suite, both guests and officers, are models of comfort. The ventilation of the state rooms is both ample and scientific.—All the proclamin bears the initials of the Prince. It is a well known fact that the Prince is a great admirer of Egyptian antiquities. A fine bronze statute of one of the most noted mummies of Belzoni is placed on a shelf in his cabinet, and all the ornaments about his drawers and bell pulls—his whole private toilette room and bedchamber are in the old Sesostrian style. One thing strikes the eye forcibly; the profuseness and busts of Napoleon I., disposed artistically about the room, and the numerous remembrances of his battles. Among the many noticeable articles in the Imperial apartments are two double-barrelled guns, gorgeously mounted in gold and precious stones, the jewelled sword which he wears as one of the Emperor's staff, and a sword presented to him by the Bey of Tunis, this last arm being studded with diamonds the entire length of the hilt and scabbard. Among the numerous paintings is an iceberg scene, taken from sketches on the last excursion of the Prince. It is a fine painting, and is very highly prized by the owner.

The Princess Clotilde is a very prepossessing lady, only nineteen years old, of a minimum height, full face, bright blue eyes and dark brown luxurious hair—thus possessing the prominent characteristics of Italian beauty. She was dressed in a light striped muslin dress,looped up in the Elizabethian style, showing a richly figured velvet skirt. Her dress was high-necked, with tight sleeves; a plain collar was fastened by a rich mosaic pin, and cuffs by massive sleeve buttons of the same material. A plain brown straw jocker-hat completed her attire. The Duchess d'Abrantes is much smaller than the Princess, and is apparently not more than fifteen years of age. She is very dark complexioned, and exhibits a beautiful set of white teeth. She was dressed in a dark coloured travelling dress, and of the same style of waist and sleeves as the Princess, though not looped up. She appeared full of vivacity, and was enjoying herself freely in jesting with the gentlemen of the suite.

At noon on Wednesday a meeting of the Board of Councilmen was held at the City Hall, when Mr. Barney introduced resolutions in regard to Prince Napoleon and suite, tendering them the hospitalities of the city. The resolutions authorised the Committee on National Affairs,with the approval of the Board of Aldermen, to act in connection with the Mayor, and tender the hospitalities of the city to the Prince and his suite, and also to tender him the use of the Governor's room for a public reception. These resolutions were adopted without debate. In pursuance of this action of the Board of Councilmen, His Honor Mayor Wood called at the New York Hotel, and paid his respects to the Prince. He was most cordially received, upon which the Mayor tendered him the hospitalities of the city and a public reception. His Imperial Highness expressed his high sense of the courtesy, but respectfully declined acceptance, as he desires to maintain strict privacy during his visit here. It is not improbable, however, that before he leaves this country the Prince will return the Mayor's visit in a private manner, by calling at his residence on Bloomingdale road.

On Sunday last, when the Prince visited Staten Island, the sentries, not knowing who he was, refused him admittance within the lines. He remonstrated, but to no purpose. Noticing an officer present—Major Olmsted—he gave him the masonic signal which was promptly answered, and this incident, of course, led to a conversation and explanations, when the rank of the visitor was discovered. The Prince complimented the sentry for his sense of duty, and seemed much pleased with the sturdy appearance of the men. He examined the arms and equipments of the men curiously, and entered one of the tents of the common soldiers, the occupant of which produced a bottle of liquor which the Prince tasted.

"What is this?" said he.

"Old Bourbon," responded the soldier.

"Old Bourbon," echoed the Prince, "why I had not idea I should like any member of that family so well."

The soldier did not see the point of the joke, but our readers doubtless will.

THE STRENGTH OF THE SOUTH

EXTRACT FROM A STATEMENT OF A UNION MAN IN GEORGIA.

After giving a description of his persecutors and the mode by which he effected his escape to Philadelphia, he says:—

It may not be out of place here to remark that the writer has the best reason to know that the North has entirely underrated the strength of the South in Virginia.

All the fighting material of the Confederate States is now concentrated within a hundred miles of Washington city.

The companies at present being raised in the South can neither be armed nor equipped, and they are, besides, chiefly composed of the poorer white people, who have no object and less inclination to fight against the Union.

The war is really carried on by the large slave-owning planters, and they have thrown life and all into the conflict.

In those districts—for example, Northern Georgia—where the large slaveholders are in a minority, there are thousands of Union men; whereas, in Mobile and Southern Georgia, the mouth that utters Union is sealed in death. Every soul in the South which has any consciousness in the North is regarded with the utmost suspicion, and it is with difficulty that the more moderate planters can restrain the fury of their confreres and check the wholesale slaughter of their fellow citizens born North.

Nothing but the self-sacrificing appearance of devotion to the cause of secession can moderate this antipathy, and all those like the writer, who cannot, assume this, in super-Southern zeal have nothing to hope but death and ruin.

DEATH OF A PHILANTHROPIST.

There were few men on this continent so extensively known, by reputation, as the late Moses Grant, Esq., of Boston, commonly called Deacon Grant, whose labors in connection with the Temperance cause, and other good causes, raised him to the first rank of philanthropists. We copy the following particulars from the Boston Traveller:—

"By the death of this good man, which occurred yesterday afternoon at 2½ o'clock, at his residence in Cambridge Street, the community have sustained a loss which will be severely felt, and hundreds and thousands of individuals who have been the recipients of his charities will mourn over his death. He was born on the 29th day of July, 1785, and was therefore seventy-six years of age. He was a member of the Common Council from 1833 to 1843, a firm friend to the public schools of the city, one of the originators of the present primary school system, and a member of the primary school committee from 1818 to 1833, occupying for several years the post of Chairman. He was, at the time of his death, President of the Howard Benevolent Society, the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism, and the Home for Aged Men; and Vice-President of the Home of Aged Women—and doing more, probably, than any other man for the last-named institution. He was managing director of the Farm School for many years, and always took great interest in the boys connected with it. His charities for a large number of benevolent societies, including poor churches of different denominations, were very large. He was always giving. In the distribution of his gifts, he resembled Amos Lawrence.—Though not distinguished for large benefactions, he distributed in this way a very large amount in sums varying from $1000 to $10. He was thought by some to be an austere man, and some who called upon him would complain of his treatment, but such persons did not know him. No man ever had a kinder heart than Deacon Grant, and no man ever felt more or did more for the poor. As an Overseer of the Poor for many years he became acquainted with their wants, and few ever called upon him in vain. It was while holding this office that he became so deeply interested in the temperance cause. He saw and keenly felt that nearly all the pauperism of the city was occasioned by intemperance, and he devoted a large proportion of his time to the distribution of temperance documents and to the maintenance of temperance meetings. Hundreds and thousands of women and children who have had drunken husbands and fathers, have been made happy by the generous acts of Deacon Grant. Many ladies of fine social position were accustomed to go to him for advice in relation to the intemperance of their husbands."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1861.

Died.

At his residence in Peterborough, on Tuesday, the 6th instant, AUGUSTUS SAWERS, Esq., aged 42 years. Precisely eleven months since he was taken down with the disease which terminated his existence. The best medical skill that could be obtained here and in New York proved ineffectual. His long confinement in one position in bed was painful and trying in the extreme to one like him who was naturally fond of life. His sufferings during the past week were excruciating, and when death came it was hailed as a relief.

Mr. Sawers was born in England, and emigrated to this country some twenty years ago. He was possessed of a good physical constitution, a vigorous and cultivated mind, quick perception, and a happy facility in expressing his views, either by speaking or writing. To him chiefly, while Mayor, were we indebted for the visit of the Prince of Wales to Peterborough, and all must remember the singular energy and tact he displayed in carrying out that object, but it is sad to have to add he never had a day of good health since that visit. He was the founder, and former editor and proprietor of this journal. He leaves a widow and five children to mourn his removal, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. His illness, though protracted and painful, was the means of leading him to prepare for the world that is come, and it is a source of comfort to his friends to know that he did improve the respite given him in seeking the mercy of God through Jesus Christ. And his spontaneous remarks to them and to those who visited him, leave the pleasing impression that he did not seek in vain.

His remains were followed to Little Lake Cemetery yesterday afternoon by a very large concourse of friends and acquaintances.

DEATH OF THE REV. Mr. GOODFELLOW.—We regret to learn of the sudden decease of the Rev. Mr. Goodfellow, late Wesleyan Minister on the Omemee Circuit, which took place in Toronto on the 22nd ult. Deceased was warmly esteemed wherever known, and worthily sustained his character as an earnest preacher of the blessed Gospel.

☞ For the accommodation of the public and readers of the daily papers particularly, Mr. Wrighton, deputy-postmaster here, will open the office for about 15 minutes each evening after the arrival of the mail by the Cobourg road.

THE Rev. WILLIAM RYERSON.

Many of our readers may not be aware that this gentleman, the member elect for West Brant, is a brother of the famous Dr. Ryerson, the Chief Superintendant of Schools. The strange circumstance of a superannuated Methodist preacher coming forward in the political arena at such an advanced age, may well excite public curiosity, and we naturally enquire into the causes which have led an old worn out preacher to seek the onerous post of a member of Parliament. In his speech on the 20th June, at Brantford, we find that he gives the following as his reasons for becoming a candidate for parliament:—

"He felt it to be his duty at this time to place his services at the disposal of his fellow subjects and at the sacrifice of friends and if in case to subject himself to the reproach abuse and aspersion of character that would be directed against him. (Cheers.) He cared not for that. He had fought shoulder to shoulder with his friend Col. Perley whom he saw before him now, with musket in hand stood in the defence of his country, and he was now prepared to do his country service in another capacity and if the crown were again assailed William Ryerson was ready to bare his breast and shed his last drop of blood in its protection. (Cheers.) He assured all that the position he occupied this day was unsought, unthought of and unexpected by him. When waited on by a number of his esteemed neighbors and friends to allow himself to be brought out as the representative of the County, he urged his objections, told them of his infirmities, and his probable inability to render them that justice that was due to them; but all in vain, and nothing that could be advanced was sufficient to induce them to relinquish their claim upon him. We assure, they said, that you will attend to the welfare of our interests, and we are assured that your main effort would be to strengthen British connexion, and intensify among the people a love for Britain, (cheers) and that in your hands the subject of a sound British education would be granted to the youth of the land. We ask, said they, no promise or pledge whatever from you, we submit all into your hands."

The Rev. gentleman had represented himself before as too old and infirm to continue the cure of souls, and was therefore superseded, but when his honorable friends the Colo. Perrin and Perly presented themselves with a message that it was his "providential duty to do battle for the people in another sphere of life he felt himself unable to refuse."

In reading the whole of his speech, we were led to suppose that loyalty was a very scarce article in the constituency of West Brant, and commanded a high premium, to warrant the selection of such an individual to conserve it. Altogether it seems like one of those addresses too often inflicted upon a patient auditory, where the speaker for want of common sense to advance to his hearers, is for ever recurring to a hobby that he "rides to death." His continual reference to "British connexion" and "intensity" of feeling towards the Queen is surfeiting and leads one almost to suppose that the individual was not always so loyal as now. It it to us who are naturally and habitually loyal unaccountable that any sane man should make such an ado about loyalty at the present time.—The "looking to Washington" so often referred to by the Rev. gentlemen was a mere escapade of a solitary member of the Parliament, and not the sentiment or utterance of a party, and that it was nothing more is shown by his re-election with a majority of 500. That an infirm old man in his dotage should make such a fuss about nothing is not surprising—but for such a paper as the Leader and that wise, sensible men should reiterate and circulate such small wares is passing strange. Have these parties forgotten the British American League formed in Kingston in 1849, the object of which was—not looking to Washington merely—but the annexation of Canada to the United States, and these gents may remember that the league was composed mainly if not entirely of Conservatives; the party which claims to be the depository of loyalty. The fact is, that with the Anglo Saxon race loyalty is but another term for self-interest; they are loyal just so long as they deem it to their interest to be so, and no longer. A practical illustration of the correctness of this remark is afforded in the case of the Southern Confederacy. The people there deem it to their advantage to be out of the Union and they secede. They are denounced as traitors and rebels by the North for so doing, While even in Canada the question is being discussed whether we are justified in styling those rebels who chose to leave a union they no longer want. We say this much to expose the silliness of those small souled politicians, in which we class the Rev. Wm. Ryerson, who, for want of more sensible matters of importance, make a hue and cry about "loyalty," "British party," "the Crown in danger," and such like. If there ever was a time in the history of Canada when Canadians were in reality loyal, were proud of the happy connexion existing between this Colony and the Mother Country, that time is the present, when the superiority of British institutions, stands forth in magnificent contrast to those of our American cousins. To make a rallying cry now of "loyalty" to a people proverbially so, whose interests and inclinations lead them to love their Queen and country, is simply ridiculous. If there were any "lookers to Washington" besides Wm. McDougall at the last session of Parliament, and we have heard of none, they must have been convinced that it was the wrong place to get relief, Abraham Lincoln and his Cabinet having enough of their own matters to attend to, for some time to come.

Mr. Ryerson tells his audience that the persons who waited on him urging him to offer himself for a candidate expressed their assurance that he (Mr. Ryerson) would attend to their interests, that his main efforts would be to "strengthen British connexion and intensify among the people a love for Britain, and that in his hands the great subject of a settled British education would be granted to the youth of the land." And so confident were they of his doing all this that they would exact "no pledge or promise from him." If all this had been found vent in one of the disunited States, it would have been intelligible enough, but proceeding as it did from Canada and a Canadian, at the present time is wholly unintelligible outside of West Brant. When the "sound British education" was spoken of we very naturally concluded that Mr. Ryerson's chief object in seeking admittance to the Legislature was to further the views of the Methodist conference in reference to the obtaining funds from the University endowment for Victoria College. But Mr Ryerson at the declaration hewill the conduct of the Wesleyan Methodists in not yielding him that support that was looked for. He says "A large number of that body among whom he had laboured, and devoted his life, and sacrificed much, had offered him a ruinous opposition, and he was pained to consider that among the Wesleyan Ministers of that circuit but one had accorded him any support." The conduct of the Wesleyans at West Brant while thus censured by the member elect will be looked upon with approbation by many others. Their opposition was a fitting rebuke for a renegade from his former position in the Church as well as from the principles of reform that he has so long advocated. He boasts of having received the united support of the Conservatives, and he in return thanks them sincerely for their kindness, which he says shall never be forgotten by him, nor shall he at any time be ashamed of them. He is put down as a Ministerialist, and no doubt was returned in consequence of his determination to support the Cartier-McDonald Administration.

The Wesleyan Methodists, both Clergy and Laity, as a body are decidedly loyal. They saw nothing of "British connexion" being in danger, and whilst many of them would probably be in favor of extending aid to Victoria College, they did not approve of the clerical politician entering Parliament as he was doing. His conduct is somewhat similar to Bishop Polk, of Tennessee,who left the church for the field. The Clerical Brigadier General and the clerical politician may make themselves famous in their new spheres,but how they can bear reflection on their early vows, or how meet the eye of Him whom they swore to serve, is passing strange. Like his brother Egerton he may however be enabled to "make the worse appear the better cause," but he may depend upon it his strange conduct will be looked upon as any thing but creditable, by reflecting men. His futile attempts to justify his conduct will recoil upon himself, and we question much if he can escape the misgivings attendant upon so questionable a course. The hero of 1812 and 1861, tries to make out that he now as then is engaged in securing Canada to the British Crown. Thank Heaven, there is no fear of losing the county, now that the Rev. Wm. Ryerson goes to Parliament for the express object to save it!

THE OPPOSITION DINNER POSTPONED.

The dinner to the successful candidates in the old Newcastle District at the late election that was to have been held in Cobourg yesterday, has been postponed till the 4th of September next. The Sun says:—

"At a meeting of the committee held last night it was resolved, that in consequence of the serious indisposition of Mr Cockburn, the dinner to our six members elect should be postponed till Wednesday, the 4th of September next. The Committee in each of the constituencies are requested to use exertioon in securing the sale of tickets, which will be forwarded to them and in every other way to promote the success of the ovation. It is hoped that the time selected will be a favorable time for the farmers, of whom it is expected that a very large number will be able to attend. The price of tickets is fixed at $1. Six hundred can be accommodated in Victoria Hall, and we hope to see it filled."

EXCURSION TO FENELON FALLS.

On Tuesday forenoon last a party of about 60 gentlemen, at the invitation of Capt. Wallis, started for Fenelon Falls on the neat little steamer Ogemah. The day was somewhat cloudy, but as little rain fell it was decidedly preferable to the burning heat of the three previous days. The presence of the Rifle Band on board added much to the pleasure of the trip. After a brief stay at Bobcaygeon a quick run was made to the Falls, where a delightful hour was spent. At 5 o'clock, p. m., the Ogemah steamed off homewards, and arrived safely in Bridgenorth shortly after nine o'clock.

THUNDER STORM.

A fearful thunder storm broke over this Town on Sunday night. The flashes of lightning were vivid and very frequent.—The electric fluid entered the house of W. Sheridan, Esq., passing by the stove-pipes into the room, but did little damage; the house of the late Mr. Downer was struck, but the damage done was trifling; a number of trees also were struck, but beyond these no accidents occurred in this neighborhood to our knowledge.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE HON. GEORGE BROWN.

Since Mr. Brown's retirement from public life a general desire has been expressed on the part of his friends to tender to him a testimonial, as a mark of their esteem, and appreciation of his services to the country while in Parliament. To this end a meeting was held in Toronto a short time since and initiatory steps taken. It was largely attended by the influential political friends of Mr. Brown, of Toronto, and the handsome sum of fourteen hundred dollars was subscribed before the meeting adjourned by seven persons. A committee was appointed to carry out the objects of the meeting, with Jas. McMaster as President, Mr. McCormick, Treasurer, and William Howland, M. P. P., Secretary.

We have received a copy of the Report of this meeting, from the Secretary, which suggests that meetings throughout Canada should be held, and committees appointed for the purpose of aiding the Toronto or Central Committee with their advice, as well as collecting such sums of money as may be offered. We hope this suggestion will be acted upon. We are certain that in this County many will be found anxious and willing to assist in carrying out the objects of the movement. We would advise the holding of meetings at once, and the formation of Committees for the purpose. Let some of our leading political men, friendly to Mr. Brown, take the matter in hands, and Peterboro', we feel confident, will not be far behind.

THE SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR,—In resuming the subject of Schools, permit me to recall to any who may read my remarks, the saying of the poet, "The mind's the measure of the man." It is the mind that measures his whole usefulness, and also measures his real enjoyment. The body is the pedestal, however, on which the mind rests, and the circumstances of fortune, the position by which it is upheld to advantage. And as it is not expedient to have these such as that the features shall not be discerned in consequence of their distance, so it is equally inexpedient to have the statue placed so low as to expose it to the contemptuous foot of pride. And as the queen bee differs from the others, chiefly in her super or feeding and breeding, so those who wish to have efficient teachers should support them well, that by hard study and respectful treatment they may become eventually worthy of respect. A teacher struggling with poverty and liable to be kicked about by every restless fort. besides being miserable in himself, is worthless or almost so to the community which can only be benefitted permanently by a teacher whom they respect. But then will not the man of ability make himself respected, even when no such security has been given that his continued exertions will be crowned with success and general approbation. To be sure he will, by sparning with disgust the petty tyranny of proud ignorance, and giving his services to other professions or employments, where his talents will be appreciated, and his work rewarded; which is just what we see in Canada. All our clever young teachers are deserting the more useful for the more lucrative, and none will be left in it excepting such as are fit only for inferior work, and a few enthusiasts whose reward is not of men, and who must eventually be choked to such a swampy atmosphere.

But to return to Scotland, it is said that two things might be done to improve the school system there, the better to regulate the permanency of the appointment. The first is as to the election, by extending the term heritors to all proprietors. Now, is not this just one of the evils under which our Canadian Schools groan? We have too many cooking at the broth which our poor children have to eat. It is not that I despise the people, for I am one of them; but because I honor the people for their common sense. They know the folly of making a matter of such importance every body's business, and therefore—nobody's business. They pronounce with me in one voice, that to multiply managers is merely to spoil the management, and that the simplest and wisest plan is to regulate the appointment wholly by examination of the teachers' qualifications, the fittest man to get the school which is vacant; and the largest school, taking number and progress into account, to yield the largest pay. Here is a simple, easily worked rule by which to secure the right man in the right place, and to supply the fair stimulus to labor, by regulating the reward according to the work done. This is only the fair plan for all, and nothing can be simpler. But who is to examine? I care not who is to examine, (though I have my preferences) provided the examination is fair and equal, and open alike to all, and the whole conducted publicly and above board. Then all who are capable and disposed will be judges of fair play. Is not this what all must approve of, whatever love of friends may prevail when temptation offers?

The second improvement offered is as to the dismissal of the teacher by a two-third vote of the inhabitants. What a bungle! I tell you that our very best professors are not able to secure from year to year, so large a vote among their own students; and if this rule were applied even to them not one of them would stand five sessions!—How then could a teacher stand such a test from a body of people, some of them knowing nothing of him except like the man who voted Aristides to banishment, merely from envy of his high character. The Great Teacher himself could not stand such a test. The better a teacher was indeed the sooner he would be be voted out. A man cannot be blamed for not pleasing the people, for not having a large school, for not making great scholars, because these things depend on others and not on himself. But if he is incapable, or neglectful, and does not make reasonable progress with such scholars as he has, then he is to blame; because these things depend on his own exertions, and of these the Inspector, whoever he may be, taking evidence, can satisfy every honest and candid person, and determine whether the defect falls under the head of inability and culpability, and classify the teacher accordingly among the pensioners or the defaulters. This I think is fair play to all parties—justice resting on truth. The neglect of this simple rule of equity has already ruined the best of the Scotch academies, and is the bane of our Canadian Institutions.

Again I have exceeded my prescribed limits, and will postpone the most important position of all, with your permission, to another opportunity, and meantime remain,

Mr. Editor,

Yours truly,
AN OLD PAROCHIAL SCHOOL MASTER OF SCOTLAND.

Peterboro, July 30, 1861.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Permit me to correct a slight mistake in your last issue. D. G. Anderson states that I spoke untruthfully about the 12th in Warsaw. Now, sir, my communication does not mention one word about the 12th. My advice to Mr. Anderson is to learn to read a communication correctly before he attempts either to write or correct one.

A POLITICAL PARODY

ON THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE.

Not a cheer was heard, nor a faint hurrah,
As up to the hustings he hurried;
Not a shout from all his former friends,
Who thus him politically buried.

They buried him brightly at noon of day,
While the Sheriff read over the carrion,
By the blazing light of a noon day sun,
His friends looking pale and sorrow.

One spiteful speech came from his breast,
'Gainst Haultain,—trying to wound him,—
But the Christian warrior sat at his rest,
With his Protestant friends around him.

Few and short were the speeches made,
Of alternate joy and sorrow;
While many of the crowd distinctly said,
Would we had another election to-morrow.

They thought and wished they had lain in bed,
And ne'er for Conger left their pillow,
To see how a stranger must reign in his stead
Who so lately came over the billow.

Now lightly they talk of the deeds he has done,
And o'en from Galway upbraid him;
But little they think of the vengeance he'll take,
When John A. again Sheriff has made him.

When the whole of the mournful task was o'er,
And the cheers for Haultain expiring,
Our Band struck up "God save the Queen,"
While friends and foes were retiring.

So we buried him brightly at noon of day,
In the spot of his former glory,
We erected a cross over his grave,
And left him alone—few were sorry.

ACCIDENT.

We have to record one more victim to the Moloch of sail boats. On the 4th inst., Mr William Stevenson, jun., of this place, with his family, and Mr McIntyre, of Bewdly, and his family, started in a sail-boat, from the head of Rice Lake, to cross to the Monaghan shore, to visit some relatives. When opposite Riordan's Island, they were overtaken by one of those squalls of wind, which are so common on Rice Lake, and their boat capsized. Fortunately, Mr. Stevenson and Mr. McIntyre were good swimmers and succeeded in getting their families (two women and three children) up on to the side of the boat.—Mr. McIntyre then started to swim to the island with his child, an infant of six months old, in his arms. The water was very rough, and it was observed that he could not at all times keep the child above the water; and when he reached the shore, he, sad to relate, found that the child was dead.

Mr. McIntyre returned to the boat, when Mr. Stevenson, swam to the shore and made a raft, with which he went off to the capsized boat, and was successful in getting off to the island the women and two children, who had then been in their perilous position for nearly three hours, with the waves continually dashing over them. It was truly a wonderful escape for the whole party.

Mr. Stevenson and the party with him were, he states, much indebted to the kindness of Mr. Fisher, of South Monaghan.—Port Hope Guide.

THE WALLACE MONUMENT NEAR STIRLING.

The Scotsman devotes nine columns to an account of the laying of the foundation stone of the monument to be erected in remembrance of Sir William Wallace, on the summit of Abbey Craig, near Stirling. The ceremony took place on the anniversary of the Battle of Bannockburn, and the stone was laid by the Duke of Athole, Grand-Master Mason of Scotland. Towards the raising of this monument subscriptions have been sought and obtained in almost every quarter of the globe. The cost of the monument is estimated at £7,000. The occasion of the laying of very particular to tell you. Let me in.' 'I don't want to hear; it is some political stuff.' 'Wife, it is very important. There is a telegraphic despatch, and I have been nominated for the Presidency.' 'Oh, Abraham, this is awful. Now I know that you have been drinking. I only suspected it before, and you may just go and sleep where you got your liquor,' and down descended the window with a slam. True enough, the next day confirmed the news that the best anecdote teller of the village had really been nominated to rule over millions."

A BEAR HUNT NEAR CAVANVILLE.

Bears have been very plentiful in the neighborhood of Cavanville during the present summer, and do not appear to be satisfied with the ordinary fare of the woods, but make occasional raids among the flocks of the neighboring farmers for a supply of mutton, which the said farmers do not at all approve of. Loud complaints have of late been made against the thieving propensities of an old she bear and her two cubs, and several fruitless attempts were made to discover their hiding place. On Monday evening last however, the bear and her cubs were seen crossing the Gravel Road immediately above Lawson's Hill into Mr. Hutchinson's woods. Messrs. W. Gainer, R. Gardiner, and some other parties, assisted by a small dog, followed in pursuit, and after a short but excited stern chase, succeeded in treeing all three, in a very large elm, not more than ten rods from the gravel road. It being about dark a fire was at once kindled under the tree to prevent the bears from coming down, and as the only weapons in the possession of the party were an old Waterloo bay poet, a pitchfork and a pepperbox, a messenger was despatched to Cavanville for reinforcements, arms and ammunition. The denizens of Cavanville, always fond of sport, turned out in force and were soon on the spot. Extra fires were made, small trees which interrupted the one in which the bears were pitched, cut down, so as to enable us to discern the trio if possible, but although the fuel was piled high on the fires, and the flames shot up through the cracking brushwood sufficiently high to single and shrivel the bears on the lower branches of the tree, which were some sixty feet high, the dense foliage of the top still hid the game from view. However, it was soon evident that the animals did not relish the smoke and intense heat, for in a few minutes a scratching noise was heard in the top of the tree, and immediately afterwards an imprudent cub was seen making his way down a large limb followed by the old bear, evidently with the intention of taking it back. She was, however, too late, a volly of shots brought down the cub, and having received one or two herself she made a hurried retreat to the top of the tree. It was now 11 o'clock, and it became evident that we should have to make a night of it, as there seemed to be no probability of being able to obtain another shot at the animals before daylight. A party was accordingly sent off to Cavanville for refreshments which were not long in reaching us, and although the weather was not very propitious—a succession of thunder showers falling throughout the night—every one present seemed to enjoy the sport. About 12 o'clock we took census. The returns gave 54 men and boys, 11 dogs, 4 rifles, 5 shot guns, 2 pistols, 1 bayonet and 1 pitchfork. With what sort of feelings old Bruin surveyed these from her lofty perch I will not venture to hazard an opinion. I am, however certain that she never had so good an opportunity of hearing the "Red White and Blue," "Annie Lawrie," "Dixie," and many other good songs which the merry company below were singing to while away the time; also if she had any taste for music she might have been highly delighted. Just as daylight was breaking a heavy thunder storm came on, the torrents of rain extinguished the fires and we were left almost in total darkness. The greater part of the company scampered off for shelter under the trees. The bears made another attempt to get down and would most probably have escaped in the darkness and confusion, were it not for the exertions of a few persons who stood to their posts in the emergency. However, the storm was over—the fires re-kindled—daylight fast appearing, and as we now felt sure of our game all parties were in high spirits. In a short time there was sufficient light to enable all present to see the old bear sitting on one branch and holding on by another near the top of the tree, the cub being nearly close to her. A volly was fired from all the guns and the old bear came tumbling down dead. A few more shots brought down the remaining cub. The The bears were of the brown nosed species. The old one was large but very poor, and had eleven balls through her. The hunt being over, the party now returned to Cavanville, bearing the game along with them. Meeting Robinson & Co.'s Circus Troupe on the way, a bargain was struck with them for the wounded cub, which they took off with them. However, as there are seven balls through it, it is not likely to survive a very long journey.—Millbrook Chronicle.

LATEST from EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ANGLO-SAXON.

Father Point, August 4.

The Anglo-Saxon arrived off here at 3.30 this afternoon. She brings 171 passengers, and £3,000 in specie.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Parliamentary proceedings on the 24th ult. were unimportant.

A writ was issued in the House of Commons for the election of a member for the city of London in place of Lord John Russell. An active canvass was going on in London between Lord Mayor Cabet, Conservative, and Mr. Weston Wood, Liberal.

A Privy Council was to be held on the 25th for arrangements for ministerial changes, which are expected to agree with published rumours.

Sir Robert Peel, it is stated, will be Secretary for Ireland.

The Morning Post asserts that Lord Palmerston will resume his old position of exponent of the foreign policy of the British Government in the House of Commons.

A public meeting having reference to the American Crisis was held in London on the 24th, at which Lord Shaftesbury presided. The object of the meeting was to present a testimonial to Dr. Cheever, of New York. The Doctor spoke strongly against the seceded States, advocating the abolition of Slavery as a duty incumbent on the Federal Government.

The shipping Gazette argues that the fate of the Collins steamer Pacific was solved by a memorandum found in a bottle picked up recently at the Hebrides, in which the writer, named Wm. Graham, states that the ship was surrounded with icebergs, and was going down.

The monster iron plated frigate Black Prince had made a highly satisfactory trial trip on the Clyde.

Sir Granby Melville, for many years secretary of the Indian Company, is dead.

FRANCE.

The Emperor was expected to return from Vichy in a day or two.

The Duke de Broglio had dropped the action commenced by him against the Prefect of Police. All copies of his pamphlets seized by the Police, had been returned.

The Bourse was quiet but firmer. Rentes closed at 67f 70c.

ITALY.

A decree had been published fixing the terms of the National loan in accordance with those already announced. The minimum price is not yet named.

A decree is also published establishing a great book of the public debt of Italy.

Neapolitan dispatches continue to teem with accounts of brigandage, with pillage and murder on a great scale.

In the consistory at Rome on the 23rd, the Pope announced a short allocution in the Court, and declared himself grateful for the continued occupation of the French troops, but he was sensible of the abuse which the enemies of order have made, and will make of the painful act of France in recognizing the kingdom of Italy.

TURKEY.

Safeli Pacha, President of the Grand Council, had been dismissed, and was succeeded by Fuad Pacha. Ali Pacha had been definitely appointed minister of Foreign Affairs.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

Funds on the 24th ult. opened at a slight relapse, but were firmer towards the close. In the discount market good bills were readily taken at 5½.

BREADSTUFFS MARKET.

Liverpool, July 25.

Richardson, Spence & Co., and Wakefield, Nash & Co., report flour 6d lower. Wheat—tendency downwards, with a decline on the inferior qualities; red 9s to 11s; white 11s 6d to 13s 6d. Corn steady—mixed 28s to 28s 6d; yellow 28s 6d to 29s; white 31s.

Provisions—Sales authorities quote beef quiet but steady. Pork flat; tending downwards. Bacon declining. Lard quiet at 50s. Tallow steady at 47s to 48s. Sugar steady and unchanged.

Live pool, via Londonderry, July 26.—Breadstuffs—Sales small; prices unchanged; business dull and unsettled.

MONEY MARKET.

London, July 26.

Consols quoted at 89½ to 90.

American stocks easier and dull; Illinois Central shares 36¼ discount.

The bullion in the Bank of England has increased £142,000.

THE CONNECTION OF SLAVERY WITH THE WAR.—ITS DOOM.

It has been said that the war has nothing to do with slavery, but no one will pretend to say that slavery has nothing to do with the war. The war is not made upon slavery. The slaves have not been proclaimed free, and called into the service of the Government; although any foreign nation at war with a slave holding country would avail itself of so conspicuous an element of weakness. Slavery still exists, with all its constitutional guarantees, in the Border States, and the citizens of these states who are in open rebellion have repeatedly had their runaway slaves returned to them. It is only in those cases where slaves have run away from rebel masters, who freely lend them to the rebel Government for the construction of fortifications, or for soldiers in the field, that the commanders of our armies have refused to deliver them up. It is therefore literally true that the war has nothing to do with slavery, while slavery has everything to do with the war. But for slavery the Southern States would be on as good terms with those of the North as Illinois with Massachusetts, and the idea of dissolving the Union, or of a war between the North and the South would be as preposterous as that of a war between Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The most natural way to put an end to a controversy is to remove the cause of it, and since the war has resulted from the refusal of the slavery propagandists to the laws, the obvious and certain cure for the political malady is the abolition of slavery. The Government will be slow in adopting this radical mode of treatment, but the public mind is rapidly ripening to the conclusion that no other will prove effectual. If undertaken at all, it should be done with a strong hand. The utmost care should be taken to prevent and punish violent outbreaks among the slaves, as well as every tendency to rapacity, violence and lawlessness, whether the enemies or the friends of the Union be the victims. In the Border States, where the body of the people are for the Union, reasonable compensation should be made to slaveholders, except where they have taken an active part in behalf of the rebellion.

It is not probable that this thorough treatment of the case will be adopted at present, if at all. To put it into successful practice would require a vast deal of moral courage and political sagacity; and regarding the matter from the stand point of constitutional right, nothing short of a great public necessity could justify it. That such a necessity would warrant it, no intelligent thinker upon the affairs of mankind will question, and that such a necessity seems to be rapidly pressing upon us, is an opinion not confined to the school of the Abolitionists.

It is to be remembered that the general abolition of Slavery in the Southern States would not be attended with the much and justly dreaded evil of a large free negro population in juxtaposition with the whites, except for a very brief period. It would be the natural order of things for the negroes to go to the extreme South to supply the demand for labor, while their places in the Border and Middle States would be taken by white men from the North and from Europe. The laws which govern the demand and supply of labor, taken in connection with the climatic adaptations of race, would be almost sufficient of themselves to adjust the populations to their appropriate latitudes; but to these influences legal persuasives might be added, and the result would be, in the course of a few years, the concentration of the great body of the negroes in the Gulf and South Atlantic States, with a free outlet to the West Indies, Mexico, and other tropical regions.

Slavery is a doomed institution. Its upholders and propagandists have waged unholy war upon the General Government, for no other reason than that they have been turned out of power, the result of a fair election, and now they must take the consequences of their crimes. Providence seems to be using their ungovernable ambition to bring about the overthrow of the wicked and barbarous system they would diffuse over the world; and now that their necks, as well as their fortunes, are staked upon the issue of the war they have waged, it is not at all improbable that their necessities will force all the action of the General Government, by compelling them to become its destroyers. Already we hear of black regiments before the first campaign is over, and when the fatigues of campaigning, the chances of battle, and the ravages of disease, shall have destroyed the flower of their youth, we shall hear of whole armies of blacks who will receive liberty on the condition of defending the lives of their late masters.—N. Y. Times.

THE ARMY WORM IN LINCOLN.

A correspondent of the St. Catharines Constitutional writing from Louth, July 27, says:—"A worm has made its appearance in our neighborhood, from which its mischievous and destructive procivilities, and incalculable numbers, seem to be identical with the "army worm" now invading large portions of the State of Illinois. We may be alarmed without sufficient cause, but judging from the ravages it has already made in about five or six days from its being seen, there appears to be reasonable grounds for serious apprehensions. It was seen first on the farm of Mr. N. H. Pawling, in Louth, on Tuesday last, and they have since spread with surprising rapidity to the adjoining fields and farms. They seem to be particularly destructive in the spring wheat just now in blossom, Indian corn, and narrow leaved grasses. So far they have done but little damage to the clover potatoes, or shrubbery; but where the narrow leaved grasses predominate, their line of advance is nearly as well defined as if fire had run over the ground. Two large and beautiful fields of spring wheat on Mr. Pawling's farm, that would have produced thirty bushels per acre, are already very seriously damaged, and a small piece of corn totally destroyed. They have spread to the farms of Messrs. G. G. Martindale, and R. Lawre, and are doing much damage to their spring crops. The largest specimens that I have seen—and I have seen fields nearly covered with them—are about 1¼ inches long, and as thick as an ordinary goosequil; of a greyish black color on the back, with two longitudinal stripes of lighter color on either side; they move actively, and when disturbed roll up like the common cut worm. At present the hogs and geese are destroying bushels of them in the roads, lanes, and pasture fields, and flocks of small birds are lending a helping hand to dislodge the invaders but it seems with little effect. I am sufficiently alarmed by the depredations already committed to keep a close watch on their motions, and should any new developments turn up with them, you may hear from me again."

THE ARMY WORM IN ELGIN.

A Southwold correspondent of the London Free Press writes, Aug. 2:—Allow me to note that Tuesday and Wednesday this week was a continuation of heavy rains and murky weather, impeding the important operations of the husbandman. On Thursday it cleared off, and Mr. Butt discovered, in one of his farms in Southwold, millions (or innumerable even on a square rod) of caterpillars on his barley fields.—To-day, I accompanied him over two fields of barley, one of oats and two of spring wheat, which are actually alive on the ground, stem straw, and few remaining heads. They are devouring all before them, cutting the leaves and heads off every stalk they climb. I never saw so much destruction in so short a time, not even excepting the ant in the West India Islands, of which I often witnessed and havoc in a few hours. They were travelling in myriads at eleven o'clock this morning, having finished a barley field with an adjoining field of spring wheat. They cut all the grass before them, and bridge drains full of water on fallen stalks. Three or four men were scattering quick lime along the fence, but of no use, whilst I looked on. I left him with a reaping machine, cutting a swath around each field and ploughing it up—then sowing quick lime on top, to try and arrest their onward progress of rapicity and ruin. The barley field would have yielded sixty bushels to the acre, by appearance of straw; now it won't average over fifteen, allowing that no more damage will be done. I just hear that another farmer has lost a field, and that they exist on other farms in the southern part of Southwold, destroying spring wheat, barley and oats. Farmers would do well to look at their fields, and give us their experience as to the remedy to stop the ravages of this customer, which throws the weevil midge and Persian fly in the shade."

VISIT OF DR. LA'MERT OF LONDON,

TO THE NORTH AMERICAN PROVINCES.

—:o:—

DR. LA'MERT of Bedford Square, London, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, &c.; author of "Self-preservation," the "Science of Life," and "Second Life," begs to intimate to his Patients and the Public that he proposes in August, making a Professional visit to the British North American Possessions, commencing with Halifax, N. S.; and that he will afterwards visit St. John, N.B., and Lower and Upper Canada.

Due notice will be given in future advertisements of Dr. La'Mert's arrival and of his place of residence in the several towns in which he may be consulted, either personally or by correspondence. In making the announcement, Dr. La'Mert wishes to point out to patients the advantages that invariably result from a personal interview, and the unusual facilities that will be afforded to those who are desirous of bringing their cases under his immediate supervision. Dr. La'Mert, moreover cannot too strongly urge on those who have already been under his care, or who may now be in correspondence with him, the eligibility of the occasion that will present itself of clearing up any doubts that may have existed in regard to their cases, and would particularly impress upon them the importance of putting themselves as quickly as possible into personal communication with him during his necessarily limited stay, which under no circumstances can be prolonged beyond the dates to be announced.

In order that no obstacle may be presented to the completion of the treatment of such cases, Dr. La'Mert will be provided with the correspondence, notes, &c., connected with each individual case in the Colonies that has come under his care during the past three years. Those who contemplate availing themselves of Dr. La'Mert's services are recommended, in the interim, to procure from one of the undermentioned local agents his work on a Medical Treatise on Nervous Debility and Functional Weakness, more particularly in reference to the Infirmities and Disorders of the Generative System, with numerous Engravings and Illustrations.

Self-Preservation;

The object of the work is not to maintain any particular opinion, but to enable every one to understand clearly the structure and functions of the organs concerned in the fulfilment of the Physical Obligations of the Married State, to explain them with the consequences arising from excesses, to prevent unnecessary anxiety, and to point out when medical assistance is requisite, which in those cases are well founded, the means of speedy relief. The work is not crowded with the technicalities of ordinary professional books, nor does it present the crudenesses which characterize the so-called "popular works" on the subject.

"Self-Preservation" may be had in a sealed envelope, price One Shilling sterling, of Messrs Chubb and Co., St John, N. B.; E. G. Fuller, Express Agent, Halifax, N.S.; or the Author will forward it, post free, on receipt of Colonial postage stamps to the amount of 18 pence sterling. 32

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL

Map of Upper Canada,

SHEWING ALSO A DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF N'TH & S'TH MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CORLISS, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post-Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority; also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distances between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Townsand Villages, the boundaries and numbers of each County and Township, the great Lakes, Rivers, and general Mill Streams. Tables showing the Variation of Time between each County Seat in Upper Canada, from the Meridian of Greenwich, the Distances of each from Quebec, Montreal, County and Township, with other information and useful statistics, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. [illegible] be illustrated with Views of the principal Towns and Villages in the Province, as contained in the accompanied Map. There will also be given on the above Map an enlarged Plan, in the most minute detail, of the streets, Railway, Passenger, Freight, Commercial, Inland and Ocean Steamboat Lines, with the names of the proprietors thereof engraved thereon; also, Post Roads, Churches, Establishments, Public Buildings, Manufactories, Stores, Inns, &c., together with many thousand gravel, plank and other Roads open to travel, the true course of rivers and creeks, lakes, enlarged Plans of Towns and Villages in the Townships.

The names of all Subscribers, with their residence or Post Office, will be engraved separately pertaining to the Map, and the number of Subscribers in the Townships and Villages will be published, with the title, occupation, business, &c., of each, thus constituting a complete Postal, Provincial, and Mercantile Business Directory.

The publishers being practical engravers, draftsmen, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 48 by 72 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvass, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4 50) payable on delivery.

Other Townships in the County will be canvassed in due time.

SHADE TREES IN PASTURE.

Upon the first subject you mention, viz: Should shade trees be allowed in pasture fields? these may be, perhaps, two opinions, but the one most generally held is against shade, unless it is in the immediate vicinity of water. The most important object to be obtained in grazing, next to good and plentiful grass, is that the cattle shall be free from any disturbance whatever, and that they shall take as little exercise as possible. In the first place, then, if the shade trees are at any distance from the water, the cattle will often stand there until their drinking time arrives, where they will push and fight for the first drink, and then rush back again to the shade. I have seen them do this often. Then, again, one of the great enemies to fat cattle, is the biting-fly, which loves the shade as well as the cattle, and when the cattle are huddled together under the shade, they suffer a great deal more annoyance and worrying than they do in the open field. I have seen bullocks smart enough to leave the shade and stand in the sun all day, and they seemed to thrive better by it. If, however, a man has a stream running through his field, where the cattle stand over their knees in water, let him by all means have abundant shade on the banks. The cattle can then stand, their legs protected, and which the water over their backs with their tails, and bid defiance to the flies.—R. W. Dowerman, in American Farmer.

NEVER COOK IN COPPER.

People do a thousand bad things, and because they continue to exist—not to live in the full sense of the word—they keep on in the bad practices, as if laugh at "rational" persons who are careful about little things. The housewife who has a fine copper or brass kettle, which is so handy to use in all sorts of cooking operations, will probably throw down the hint she reads this item, with the remark that "it's all bosh nonsense." But we wish to tell her, nevertheless, that every item of sauce or food she cooks in a copper or brass vessel is poisoned. The amount of poison in each case may be small, and a person with a vigorous constitution may eat out of brass or copper for many years without dying; but from what we know of the chemical nature and influence of copper, we would just as soon take a small dose of arsenic as to eat fruit, or other food, cooked in a copper or brass kettle, unless the inner surface be kept perfectly coated with tin.—Agriculturist.

CURRANT WINE.

A judicious housekeeper, whose Currant Wine we have tried and approved, furnishes her recipe to the American Agriculturist as follows: Let the currants get fully ripe before picking, but carefully sort out all decaying berries; the stems need not be removed. Warm them a little, and press out the juice through a close flannel. To three gallons jug add three quarts of the juice and 9 lbs. of white sugar, and fill up with pure water. Pulverize a bit of alum, the size of a hickory nut, and add it to the jug, shaking it. Tie lace or muslin over the mouth, and let rem in a cool cellar until late in Autumn, or first or six months; then rack (or pour) off clear, and cork tightly in bottles.

PICKLING RIPE CUCUMBERS—GOOD.

At our request, Mrs. S. Gooding, Niagara Co., N. Y., furnishes for the American Agriculturist the following directions for a preparation of cucumbers, which is pronounced extra good by several of our acquaintances who have tried them: Take ripe cucumbers, when yellow but not soft; cure and remove seeds, cut lengthwise into quarters, or if they are very large, cut into pieces small enough quarters; put into a kettle with just water enough to cover them, adding a handful of salt, or enough to make a weak brine; boil until cooked through, but not soft, (a little alum added will harden the pickles;) take out and drain well from the brine; place them in stone-ware or glass jars, and cover with a syrup made by boiling a quart of vinegar with four pounds of sugar, skimming it clear. Spice by boiling in the syrup, cloves and cinnamon tied in a bag. Cover the jars and set aside in a cool place, and they will keep well through the year.

TO KEEP OLD CHEESE.

Contributed to the Agriculturist by "An Old Cheesemaker." When brought from their winter quarters in the cellar, wash and dry them; then with a paste of rye or wheat flour, cover them entirely with clean wrapping paper. They will need no further attention except to turn them occasionally on the shelves, to keep them from molding.

BLACKBERRY WINE.

Several receipts for making this have been published in the Agriculturist, nearly all of which we have tried. The following has proved best in our own experience.—Take the ripe berries, picking out decayed ones, and press out the juice through a close linen cloth. To each quart of juice add one quart of water in which is dissolved two pounds of good plantsugar—second quality, or "B. sugar" answers well. Put into glass bottles or stone-ware jugs, and cover the mouth with muslin or any open woven cloth, to admit air and keep out insects. Set in the cellar for six months, and then pour off carefully from the lees into clean bottles, and cork up for use as wanted. For large quantities, clean casks or barrels may be used, covering the bung with muslin. It is not essential to rack off the wine until wanted for use or for sale.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYANT'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THIS most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x38 inches, entitled.

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine.

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 4th Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in first line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscription. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries must be $5 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

Address,

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ARE we present you with a perfect Hospital of Terrors, a chief of a tribe of the strange Asiatic Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlet and Almanac—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The nerves of the heart is weakened, and as the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; bound, a cough—and all from a slight impurity of the fountain and life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which man and beast drank, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lungs of the man dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and fluent, clearing and cleansing the vital organs.

Plainant indeed, is it to me, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and ensure the sufferer to heighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints,	Debility,
Coughs,	Fever and Ague,
Colds,	Female Complaints,
Chest Diseases	Headaches,
Consumption,	Indigestion,
Dyspepsia,	Influenza,

Female Weakness,	Liver Complaints,
Liver Complaints,	Lumbago,
Nervous Affections of Spasms,	Piles,
Rheumatism,	Stone and Gravel,
Secretary Symptoms,	Tumors,
Ulcers,	Worms.

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Mountains, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Discovery" of the Indians.

Observe—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Square Box (Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the signature of S. I. JUDSON & CO. on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove a numerous service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR THE DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of health by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life diseased, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the Sarsaparilla has not the virtues in it that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents for them furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no other. The sick want the best and there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

Ormond & Gilmour, Wm. Coulter, and W. A Kempt, Peterboro'; C. Benson, Lindsay; E. Gregory, Millbrook; A. Goodfellow, Springville, and all medicine dealers. Northrop & Lyman, General Agents for the Canadas.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail to restore the system, and always bring about what is required. SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sudden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all debility, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice,
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,
Consumption,	Scrofula, or King's Evil
Debility,	Sore Throats,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Dysentery,	Secondary Symptoms,
Erysipelas,	Tic-Douloureux,
Female Irregularities,	Tumours,
Fevers of all kinds,	Ulcers,
Fits,	Venereal Affections,
Gout,	Worms of all kinds,
Head-ache,	Weakness from whatever cause,
Indigestion,	&c., &c.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

ALBION HOTEL, MONTREAL.

L. W. DECREU, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

Poetry.

CONSOLATION.

Thou'rt down, low down, poor heart—
At the bottom of the hill;
The prudent friends who knew thee,
When fortune seemed to woo thee,
Are true to for one still.
So deeply art thou fallen,
Who once did soar so high,
That beggars of thy bounty
Look proud, and pass thee by;
And former boon companions,
Whisper thy name and frown—
"The ways of heaven are righteous,
So—kick him—he is down!"

And yet, though down, poor heart—
This consolation's thine—
Thy Conscience still befriends thee,
And kindly message sends thee
To bear, and not repine.
The sun that lights the ocean,
Shines also on the mire;
The mole hill and the mountain
Alike receive its fire.
The humblest dewy daisy,
That blossoms on the sod,
May point, like the pine tree, skyward,
And drink the light of God.

THE MAD DRIVER!

"Now we are off again," said Wetherbee as we heard the sound of a step upon the box; "and if we have the room to ourselves for the whole distance, we may make a comfortable time of it."

The rain was still falling and the wind howled around the corners of the old hostelrie; but we felt none of it within our snug ensconcement. The coach started with a jerk at the crack of the whip broke sharply upon the air. We heard the noise of some one in the distance—a loud excited noise—but it was lost in the howl of the storm; and ere many moments we had been hurled away from the village. Again the crack of the whip sounded upon our ears and we went more swiftly on.

"What can have got into the horses?" muttered the doctor.

"Just out from the stable and a little antic," I suggested. "Or, they may not like this weather."

"But," said my companion, as the driver cracked the whip again, "why should Carter urge them so. Just look at the fence posts and see how we pass them!"

I looked, and saw that we were dashing along at a furious rate; but I had no need to look at the fences, for the rattling of the wheels, and the dashing of the mud, and the strange motion of the coach, told very plainly the speed at which we were moving.

"The horses are running away," I said, beginning to feel alarmed.

"But hark!" added Wetherbee, hear him ply the whip. Carter must have been drinking. Mercy! we will be over at this rate!"

As he spoke he gazed out at the window again; and then he called out with his might for the driver to stop; but without effect. Our rate of speed seemed to increase, and the coach was tossed and rocked upon its braces as though some mad giant were playing with it. We both sprang to the forward seat, and forced open the curtain; and then enough had been torn to allow us to throw it aside, the doctor again put out his head and called for the driver to stop; but the only answer was a more ferocious lashing of the whip, and a more terrific plunging of the horses.

"In heaven's name gasped Wetherbee, drawing in his head as a clout of mud struck him heavily on the cheek, "what can this mean?"

"We shall be upset—killed—lost—at this rate! Merciful God! this is terrible!"

In a moment more he reached out and hallooed again. He reached further out holding himself firmly by the frame-work of the coach, until he looked up into the box. Quickly he drew back, and an exclamation of terror burst from his lips.

"It is not Carter!" he said.

"IT IS MARK WHARTON! He is alone upon the box—he holds the reins, and the whip—and he is saving mad!"

Angels of mercy! what a situation! but hark: In a moment more the voice of the maniac driver mingled with the sharp clang of the whip. He had heard the cry of the passenger, and it seemed to loose his own tongue.

"On! on!" he shouted in thunder tones. "Ho, he, for a ride in another storm! Up! up! Peel it, brave horses! There is no lightning now—no dead oxen in our track! Ho-long! up! up! up!" And the clash of the whip kept time to the mad words he spoke. The ponderous coach swayed fearfully to and fro; the horses plunged on with a madness equal to that which thus furiously urged them; and every moment seemed ready to hurl us to destruction.

What could we do? Was there a steep hill at hand, in ascending of which the tired horses must stop? No there was none.—The first hill of any consequence we should have to descend—it was 12 miles from Stafford; and at the foot of that hill the road took a sharp turn. To that point the road was nearly straight. Could the horses hold out to reach the fatal precipice?—Yes—we feared they could; for they were tough beasts, inured to hardships, and possessing most extraordinary powers of endurance.

"Oh," gasped Wetherbee, as the voice of the maniac broke within crossing madness upon our ears, mingling awfully with the howling of the storm, "can we find no way to stop him?"

By this time I began to reflect; and the very stupendousness of the affair inspired me with a sort of heart-hushed calmness.—I spoke in this mood to my companion, and hinted that we should gain nothing by being frantic.

"It know it," he said. "And yet," he added, while a fearful shudder convulsed his frame, "if you had seen this madman as I have seen him — if you had watched hour after hour over his ravings—if you had stood by his couch through the long night, and trembled with awful fear even while he was bound with cords, you would feel strangely now, when you found him, in a paroxysm more terrible than ever before, your master and your guide—your evil genius! But I understand you. We must be calm if we can. And yet how fearfully we are going!"

"And," I added, as we passed a loaded team, "how wonderfully he drives. We have passed many dangerous places, made several curves, and met a number of teams, and yet see how he guides the horses."

"He alone could do it," returned the doctor, casting a glance upon the hedge by the roadside. "He is a masterly driver."

"I suppose you speak to him once more," I said.

Wetherbee did so. He reached out at the open space, and called aloud for the maniac to stop; but the effort was fruitless, it only caused Mark to yell more terribly to his panting horses, and to apply the whip anew.

"I might try to gain the box," said the doctor; but that would be worse than madness. Even were I strong enough to secure him, the coach would be overturned ere it could be done."

No, no—that though was not worth entertaining. "There was but one alternative for us. If the worst came, we must force open the door and leap, and leave poor Mark to his own fate.

"Ludlow's hill is not more than half a mile off," said my companion, drawing in his head. "I can see the chimneys of the houses, and that is not more than a dozen rods from the pitch. The coach can never go down there—never! It must be dashed to atoms ere it makes the turn! The horses will be crushed, and the ruin absolute!"

If we had a hope that the horses might faint before the precipitous hill could be reached that hope was now gone. We were approaching it very near, yet the animals abated not a jot of their speed, they evidently knew the hand that guided them, and had not forgot to obey their old driver. Theo dashed on at the keen jump, keeping wonderous time in their step, while from their iron-shod hoofs the mud was hurled in every direction. The rain had ceased to fall, but the wind still blew coldly and, cheerlessly, and the heavens were black with clouds. On, on, we dashed, the coach swaying more fearfully than ever, while the voice of our mad driver sounded awfully above the din.

"We must jump," said the doctor. "We are close upon the hill." As he spoke he reached his head out and gazed upon the scene before us. I had already forced away the curtain on my side so as to reach the knobs of the door, when he turned towards me with a new look upon his face. It was a gleam of hope which I caught in a moment.

"There are two or three trunks piled up before Ludlow's and two women standing there! They are waiting for the stage and are already making signals for us to stop.—O, if Mark Wharton remembers his old calling, he may—"

While the Doctor was speaking the voice of the Maniac driver suddenly changed its tone and burden:

"Whoa-up! Whoa-ho-ho-ho-up!"

In a few moments more the coach whirled up into Ludlow's yard, stopped before the house, and Mark Wharton leaped from the box. He called to people by name as if nothing happened, and bade them hurry if they meant to go through along with him.

"There is no time to spare," he said resuming his mild way. "There's a storm in the heavens, and dead oxen on the road; and we should reach Epping before dark!"

By this time we who had ridden within were free from the stage; and the doctor who was a muscular man, slipped quietly up behind the maniac and caught him by the elbows, locking his arms so that he could not free them. In a moment more I was by his side, and by dint of much exertion, we got the men from the house to help us. It was hard work, but we finally succeeded in securing the unfortunate driver, after which we conveyed him into the house, and put him upon a bed, where we left him alone with the doctor, who told us he could manage him best without other presence.

When I returned to the yard I found two of the horses had dropped from exhaustion, while the other two were not much better off. However we got them into the barn where they could be better cared for. In a few minutes Carter came dashing up upon a powerful horse, covered with mud from head to foot. He was all excitement and anxiety; but when I assured him that the only serious damage which had been done was the exhaustion of the horses, he breathed more freely. In a little while Dr Wetherbee came out and informed us that the fearful paroxysm was passed, and that Mark was now sleeping under the effects of an opiate.

"I had to wait at the Post Office longer than usual," said Cartier, in explanation of his part; "and the first thing I knew, Mark was on the box, with the reins in his hands. I ran, and hallooed with all my might; but it was too late. He had come up to the hostler as natural, and taken the reins so much in his old way, that the fellow gave up without thinking of harm.—However I got the best horse saddled as soon as I could and dashed off after ye, for I knew that it would take a smart one to catch that team if they were put to it.—There'll be a wages along with the mail as soon as possible, so you won't be detained long on the road. But," he added, after a pause, "I don't see how in the world Mark ever drove that stage at such a speed, on such a narrow road, and through such narrow chances, and kept it right side up.

"It is wonderful," I said.

'Aye,' returned Carter with a touch of enthusiasm; "it is wonderful; and nobody but Mark Wharton could have done it. I tell ye, sir, ye're ridden to-day behind the best driver in this country let him be mad or not."

Perhaps I had; but at that moment (and I have seen no reason to change my opinion since) I made up my mind that I never wanted to ride behind a mad driver again. It isn't pleasant; and, moreover, I don't think it safe.

If you wish to learn all your defects quarrel with your best friend, and you will be surprised to find what a villain you are, even in the estimation of a friend.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON THE REBELLION.

Wendell Phillips has delivered another oration on the rebellion. After speaking of the emancipation of slaves by England, he says:

"That is the picture that has been held up to our country for twenty-five years.—What is the use of recurring to it? It is no longer within our reach. We omitted to seize the opportunity—it is gone! Thirty years ago, in England, when Lord Brougham was advocating the emancipation of the slave, I remember he used with great effect the trite classical story of the sybil who came to the Roman king with nine books for sale, represented as indispensable to the safety of Rome. She named her price—the proud king waved it aside. The sybil left, burned three of the books, and returned, offering six at the same cost. The confident king waved her a second time aside. She went, and returned again with three, still for the same price. And then Rome bought the sacred pledge of her safety, furnished to one-third, at the same sacrifice. Twenty years ago, God set us the example of peaceful, moral emancipation, by ordinary force of law. We dashed it aside. He offers us now, at the same cost, emancipation at the mouth of the cannon—nothing else.

"The lesson of to-day is not for us; we must seek it further. Far off, beyond those islands, rests the Queen of the Antilles, St. Domingo. Her emancipation was different. The races had rushed to arms. Blood flowed in torrents. England was about to invade the island. Government, pushed to the extremity, at midnight the sovereignty of the realm slipping from its grasp, in despair, as a means of keeping hold of its territory, proclaimed emancipation. It was won by blood and fire. Half the cities were burned; almost every valley floated with blood; the slave wrote the guaranty of his emancipation in the blood of seventy thousand Frenchmen sent to subdue him. This is the only lesson left for us to-day—this: how far short of St. Domingo can the Government stop? What is the policy that may save us from the last extremity of bloody emancipation? The British model is gone. The only question for us is, how far short can we stop of St. Domingo?

"There are two or three methods before us. The first is—and this most men flatter themselves to be possible—we can conquer the South, we can keep the Union as it was. I deem that a dream. (Applause.) I hold it just this side of lunacy — nothing more. The old Union of '87 is gone beyond recovery. (Cheers.) No million of men in arms can bring it back again. I do not know that I was ever found depreciating the courage of the South. I have held that in the nineteenth century, the age of money, it would be impossible for a Southern empire, from political and economical reasons, to survive—they would be starved out. I hold that opinion still. But I believe I never have doubted the personal courage and intense earnestness of the Southern States. I stand to-day exactly where I have stood. I know nothing of the future but by the past. Poland, trodden under the heel of an empire whose resources are boundless, is still Poland, in arms. Hungary crushed by the weight of half Europe on her head, is still Hungary, determined to be free. And Italy, with six centuries of demoralization, has still strangled the purpose of the French Emperor with one hand, and Austria and Russia with the other, and is still Italy, united and free. (Loud cheers.)

"I believe that the five or six millions of Englishmen residing South of Mason and Dixon's line have hearts as bold and will as determined as Italy, Hungary, or Poland. And this nation, in a mere fight of white men and white men, will write her history a copy of the Russian history as to Poland, the Austrian history as to Hungary, and the Italian history, if she goes on to fight as she does to-day. The past proves it; and it seems to me that every thoughtful man must see it. At any rate, such will be the picture of the next ten years. I am well aware that the South has not yet dared to meet the North face to face in open field and fair fight, or at least whenever she has done so she has been beaten. Witness Kansas and Western Virginia. But for all this, I hold the South deeply in earnest, and able in open fight or by guerilla to drag on the war for many years.

"But that is not the only question. Foreign countries watch us. England and France watch us. England has no purpose nearer her heart than to cripple and undermine the manufacturing and commercial supremacy of the North. How can she do it? By robbing her of one half of the union. By seizing the opportunity to plant a rival State at her side. That State, with the underhand support of English money and English arms, can take Mexico for her wing, and Cuba for her left, and then, with some eighteen millions of inhabitants, holding the black population in chains, she will be one of the best customers that Lancashire has. How much would the British Government do to found and uphold such a State? She would do everything. And I do not believe in any such virtue in the middle classes of Great Britain as would rebuke very severely the Administration for the woeful crime of acknowledging such a confederacy. For I remember China and India. If, therefore, the war lasts two or three years, it is not a war with the Southern States, supported openly or by stealth by England; especially if the death of Louis Napoleon should free England from fear of French interference or invasion; when, by the time that happens, possibly there may be a fourth party in the play."

The Brock's Bush Gang were captured in Cobourg on Tuesday last.

Abstemiousness and frugality are the best bankers. They show a tenderness interest, and never dishonour a draft drawn on them by their humblest customers.

No man can promise him. If to be wealthy till night. One storm at sea, one coal of fire, one false friend, one undriven word, one false witness, may make the 6 beggar and a prisoner all at once.

IS HE FAT?

A REAL GHOST STORY.

One of most remarkable cases of sudden cure of disease of long standing, was that of a rheumatic invalid, with which is connected an amusing ghost story. There were a couple of men, in some old settled part of the country, who were in the habit of stealing sheep and robbing church yards of the burial clothes of the dead. There was a public road, leading by a meeting house where there was a grave, and not far off on the road a tavern. Early one moon-light night, while one of thieves was engaged in robbing a grave, the other went off to steal a sheep. The first one, having accomplished his business, wrapped the shroud around him, and took his seat in the meeting-house door, waiting the coming of his companion. A man on foot, passing along the road towards the tavern, took him to be a ghost, and alarmed almost to death, ran as fast as his feet could carry him, to the tavern which he reached out of breath. As soon as he could speak, he declared that he had seen a ghost, robed in white and sitting in the church door. But nobody would believe him. He then declared that if any of them would go with him he would go back and they might be convinced. But incredulous as they all were, no one could be found who had the courage to go. At length a man, who was so afflicted with the rheumatism that he could not walk, declared he would go with him if he could only walk to get there. The man then proposed to carry him on his back, took him up, and off they went. When they got in sight, sure enough there was, as he had said. Wishing to satisfy themselves well and get as near a view of his ghostship as they could in the dim light, they kept venturing up nearer and nearer. The man with the shroud round him, took them to be his companion with a sheep on his back; and asked in a low voice: "Is he fat?"—Meeting with no reply, he repeated his question, raising his voice higher. "Is he fat?" No reply again when he exclaimed, in a vehement tone. "IS HE FAT?" This was enough. The man with the other on his back replied: "Fat or lean, you may have him;" and dropping the invalid travelled back to the tavern as fast as his feet could carry him. But he had scarcely gotten there, when in came the invalid on foot too! The sudden fright had cured him of his rheumatism; and from that time forward he was a well man! This is said to have been a real occurrence. And it is not the only case of such cures of which I have heard. I once heard of an old woman, who had been bed ridden, I think, for twenty years, and who upon the house taking fire made her escape upon her feet, and was never so confined by the disease afterwards.

DESERTION OF THE WATERING PLACES.

Jeff. Davis has played havoc with the fashionable watering places. Poverty and destitution are described as reigning there supreme. At Sharon, which was last year so crowded that numbers could not get accommodation, there are not as many visitors as would pay the servants' wages. Even the old gouty and rheumatic habitues, who have never before been known to miss a season are absent. Newport, Saratoga, Cape May and Nahant present the same vicious and dreary aspect. The huge barracks of hotels which fashionable caprice has helped to build up are full only of the echoes made by a few unemployed waiters. It has been stated that the cottages at Newport are almost all occupied; but the fact of their being so does not help the hotels. They are occupied by families that either own them or that find an economy in hiring them for the season, thus reducing the expense of their yearly town establishments. Notwithstanding the efforts made by the hotel proprietors to put the best face on things, it is evident that there will be a grand smash up this season at what are called the first class watering places. The expenses of the large hotels are frightful, and one season like the present is sufficient to absorb all the profits of past years. Between the periodical recurrence of commercial panics and the distress caused by the war, this class of property will soon cease to have any value. We are entering upon an era of hard facts, and the sooner we become sensible to the realities of our position the better it will be for all. The desertion of those haunts of vice and folly—the fashionable watering places—we hail as one of the first evidences of returning reason.—N. Y. Herald.

THE CUNNING WILL.

Many of our readers are familiar with the device adopted in one of Shakspeare's heroines for testing the worth of her lover, by compelling him to choose between gold, silver, and lead caskets, where the least prominent metal contained the prize. The following incident is of a similar sort, and led to similar results:

A wealthy old lady had a nephew and niece, and a more distant relative, a young lady; these were the only persons to whom her property would descend by law, when she should die. The first two always made a great show of affection when they visited her, which was quite seldom, although she wished that one of them might live with and care for her in her old age. But neither would consent to this, and she therefore employed the young lady as a servant. The old lady was very pious, and spent much time with her Bible; and her young companion, who was also a sincere Christian, loved nothing better than to read to her from its consoling pages. She was faithful in her duties, not merely because paid for it, but she was sincerely attached to her mistress, and delighted to promote her comfort.

In time, the old lady died, and after the funeral, according to custom, a lawyer came to open and read the will in presence of the surviving relatives. It ordered all her possessions to be divided into three parts. The first portion was to consist of the house and lands surrounding it; the second of the furniture, plate and jewellery, of which there was a large quantity, and the third was only the old Bible which had afforded her so much happiness in life. It was further directed that the nephew should have the first choice. The nephew instantly chose the house and farm, which were valuable, saying in a sneering tone, "The old lady was not to be fooled by pretended devotion, she well knew who were her friends," meaning by this to cast reflections upon the faithful servant. The niece was equally unkind, for she said; "Since Janet loved the bible so well, of course she would prefer I should leave it for her, and I will therefore take the furniture and plate." Janet's only reply on receiving the Bible was: "I am content; this book is to me a treasure, and I can find in it more than wealth can give."

When all was over, and Janet returned to her room, she turned at once to her Bible, to find some passage that might soothe her wounded feelings. What was her astonishment to find, laid between its leaves, bank notes amounting to more than a hundred thousand dollars, which had been placed there on the day of the old lady's death, and which made up the bulk of her fortune! So you see how in this instance, greediness outwitted itself, and true devotion was abundantly rewarded. Don't forget, though that Janet would have been happier with her book alone, and a contented heart, than the others could possibly be while they cherished the evil feelings of avarice and jealousy.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

IN TWO PARTS—PART I.

It is often difficult to determine the precise limits of Christian liberty. No one doubts the general duty of self-denial, but conscientious persons are often troubled to know whether some particular indulgence is consistent with a holy Christian life.—It is strange that any one should have scruples on such a subject as Total Abstinence, and in examining this question let it be observed that we have nothing to do with those who advocate unlimited indulgence, but with those who claim the liberty of moderate and occasional drinking.

We lay down the proposition that indulgence in alcoholic drinks as a beverage, is inconsistent with Christian duty.

1. That such indulgence is unnecessary. The day is past when it was advocated as an aid to digestion, almost past when it was claimed as necessary for enduring long continued exposure and exertion. In the various expeditions to the Arctic Seas it has been ascertained that men of strictly temperate habits have greater powers of endurance, and military commanders have recorded it as their experience that soldiers will sustain more fatigue and privations when liquor forms no part of their daily allowance. The reason of this is obvious. The introduction of alcoholic drinks into the system imparts no additional strength, but merely excites to a more lavish expenditure of that already existing. Now Nature's laws are so exact and inflexible that such excitement is always attended by a corresponding depression. Hence to use artificial stimulants in our labors is to draw on the resources of to-morrow for the necessities of to-day, the surest way to physical as well as pecuniary ruin. To the soldier who is to watch for a single night amid cold and storm, or the hangman who would nerve himself for his revolting task, such stimulation is desirable, even at the expense of subsequent depression. But this is strictly a medicinal use of these drinks, and it is a painful necessity which requires it; but to the daily labourer in the study, or the workshop, or on the farm, they are, to say the least, absolutely useless.

But it may be asked, why forbid alcoholic drinks on festive occasions? Since it produces a genial flow of spirits, quickens the mental activities, and promotes conviviality, why not use it at the expense of the vigor and activity of to-morrow? Now, we ask, is not the society of friends sufficient to give interest to our festive hours? Are there no topics of conversation so fruitful and important as to engage us, and even excite, without the aid of alcoholic poison? Has the world so lost its interests, and life its charm, that like the worn out votary of pleasure, we must whip ourselves up to every social effort, and our most delightful tasks? and knowing that this exhilaration is not natural, but artificial, must detract from the pleasure it affords. That beaming smile, that cordial welcome, that joyous peal of laughter that mingles with the ring of glasses at the festive board, what is it but the offspring of a drugged stomach and excited brain, rather than the genial and spontaneous outburst of the heart. And, moreover, show your right to spend the strength of the next hour in pursuit of pleasure, and thus incur depression and feebleness to-morrow for the greater enjoyment of to-night. If you say "I have nothing to do to-morrow," it is false. That man or woman does not live who has nothing to do. That moment never passes over our heads that does not bring with it its own imperative obligations. The only argument, then, in favor of using liquors as the pleasure experienced in swallowing them, or in making him feel happy, as the drunkard says; but it is all delusion. The happiness obtained from the Bottle is like the "crackling of thorns under a pot; it will soon be turned to mourning."

2. The testimony of medical men, and of universal experience, is that indulgence in such drinks as contain but a small proportion of alcohol is followed by a desire or appetite for them, and a sense of satisfaction in using them which was at first unknown. This attachment is formed so gradually that usually the mind takes no notice of it till it has gained considerable strength. It increases steadily with the indulgence; and if once the craving be formed, there is no remedy for it but total abstinence. It is stronger than the judgment, the conscience, or the affections. It mocks at the victim's own vows and resolutions,—laughs at the censures of the Church,—tramples down the restraints of social position, and threats aside the affectionate entreaties of friends. Would you erect a barrier between the drunkard and his cups? Set up before him the mother that bore him, and who first taught his infant lips to pray, or the wife of his bosom, or the child of his love. Set up all his hopes for this world, and all his hopes for eternity, and he still will have his drink, though those hearts lie crushed and bleeding, and those prospects in ruin behind him. Let no one say, "I will quit it as soon as I find I like it too well." That is the very time you will not quit it. To temper with it does not comport with the warning, "Go not in the way of evil men; avoid it, pass by it, turn from it and pass away." It is inconsistent and sinful for a man, trusting in his own strength, to go and stand on the brink of danger to court the temptation before which so many have been unable to stand. If he has not God's grace within him he has no assurance that he will not fall into the lowest depths of drunkenness; and if he knowingly tampers with temptation it is pretty conclusive evidence that he has not this grace.

THE BIRDS IN THE SENATE OF FRANCE.

M. Bonjeau read a report on four petitions praying that measures might be taken to preserve birds which destroy insects hurtful to agriculture. The report, which occupies five columns of the Moniteur, is an amusing essay upon insect-eating birds, their habits, anatomy, and species of food. It treats at length of the ravages of the insects and the importance to man of the objects they destroy. France is infested with thousands of species of insects of terrible fruitfulness, nearly all of which prey on what should serve the purpose of man. The first section is headed "Importance of Birds to Agriculture." It states that the wire-worm consumed £160,000 worth of corn in one department alone, and was the cause of the three deficient harvests which preceded 1856. Out of 501 grains of colza gathered at Versailles, all but 196 had been rendered worthless by insects. The reduction of yield in oil was 32.8 per cent. In Germany according to Latreille, the phalæna monacha consumed whole forests. In Eastern Persia three years ago more than 24,000,000 cubic metres of fir had to be cut down because the trees were attacked by insects. Man is unable to cope with these destroyers. His eye is too dull and his hands too slow. Without the aid of birds he would be vanquished in the struggle.—The commission excludes birds of prey, such as magpies, ravens, &c., with the exception of buzzards and rooks, from the benefit of its protection, because the buzzard consumes nearly 6,000 mice yearly, an incalculable amount of white worms.—Sparrows are rehabituated, and their usefulness shown by reference to the facts that when their destruction was attempted in Hungary winged insects increased so rapidly that rewards for the destruction of sparrows were suppressed, and given for bringing them back. Frederick, the Great ordered the destruction of sparrows because they ate his cherries; but in two years' time he found his cherries and all other fruits consumed by caterpillars. In a sparrows nest on a terrace in the Rue Vivienne were found the remains of 700 cockchafers. Owls, and birds of that class, which agricultural ignorance pursues as birds of ill omen. They are ten times more useful than the best cats and not dangerous to the larger. The contents that were killed were found in their stomachs the remains of 543 insects. After further illustrations the report proposes the prohibition of all means of destroying birds save by fire arms, with the exception of nets for wild ducks and palmipedes generally, and the prohibition of bird-nesting and destruction of eggs or young birds.

THIRTEEN PERSONS STRUCK WITH LIGHTNING.

A storm of peculiar severity visited part of Essex on Thursday evening, on night, and we regret to say that it was attended with disastrous, though not as yet fatal consequences. The growling of the thunder was heard, and vivid flashes of the lightning seen in Chelmsford; but the storm took a south-easterly direction, and its principal fury appears to have felt at Rettendon and Battle's Bridge, about 9 miles distant. It raged there from 8 to 9 o'clock, and so violent a storm not being recollected in that neighborhood, it created alarm among the villagers, who were induced to herd together as if safety was to be found in numbers. In the house of William Hom, three families residing there were all assembled in one room, together with four other persons who had sought refuge there, when the lightning struck off the top of the chimney and descended into the apartment, prostrating the whole 13, and seriously injuring two of them named John Havens and Eliza Marsh.—Both of them were very severely burnt, the young girl remaining insensible for twenty minutes after she was struck; and the underclothing of both of them was found full of small holes, as if it had been penetrated by shot. They still lie in a very dangerous state, though hopes are entertained of their recovery. The boot was cut completely off the foot of another little girl named Hannah Bom. The others sustained little or no injury beyond the sudden prostration and fright. The cottage clock, close to which the two injured persons were standing were greatly damaged; its chains appear to have exercised an attractive power over the electric fluid, as its most deadly force was spent in that direction, after which it escaped by the window, in which several panes of glass were broken. There is also a large hole in the end of the house, and it is otherwise much shaken and damaged. Several trees in the immediate neighborhood were also struck. In the adjacent parish of Rawreth the fall of hail was fearful, the stones being so heavy as to kill large birds on the trees. One man states that he picked up twenty dead rooks, and could have picked up a hundred in the distance of a mile.—Western Paper.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE BATTLE OF BULL'S RUN.

The official report of the battle of Bull's run by Brigadier General McDowell, addressed to the Commander-in-Chief, dated August 6, has been published. He states that his report has been delayed in consequence of the inability of the subordinate commanders to obtain a true account of the state of their commands at an earlier moment.

General McDowell represents the battle to have been won by his army at half-past three in the afternoon, but the arrival of Johnston's fresh troops by train at that time converted the victory into a disastrous rout—the Union troops being worn out with the fatigue of a hard day's battle. He says:—"The enemy was evidently disheartened and broken. But we had been fighting since half-past ten o'clock in the morning, and it was after three o'clock in the afternoon.—The men had been up since 2 o'clock in the morning, and had made what to them unused to such things seemed a long march before coming into action, though the longest distance gone over was not more than one and a half miles; and though they had three days provisions served out to them the day before, many no doubt either did not eat them or threw them away on the march or during the battle, and were therefore without food. They had done much severe fighting. Some of the regiments which had been driven from the hill in the first two attempts of the enemy to keep possession of it had become shaken, were unsteady, and had many men out of the ranks.

It was at this time that the enemy's reinforcements came to his aid from the railroad train, understood to have just arrived from the valley with the residue of Johnston's army. They threw themselves in the woods on our right, and opened a fire of musketry on our men, which caused them to break and retire down the hill-side. This soon degenerated into disorder, for which there was no remedy. Every effort was made to rally them, even beyond the reach of the enemy's fire, but in vain. The battalion of regular infantry alone moved up the hill opposite to the one with the houses on it, and there maintained itself until our men could get down to and across the Warrenton turnpike, on the way back to the position we occupied in the morning. The plain was covered with the retreating troops, and they seemed to infect those with whom they came in contact. The retreat soon became a rout, and this soon degenerated still further into a panic.

"Finding this state of things was beyond the efforts of all those who had assisted so faithfully during the long and hard day's work in gaining almost the object of our wishes, and that nothing remained on the field but to recognize what we could no longer prevent, I gave the necessary orders to protect their withdrawal, begging the men to form in line, and offer the appearance, at least, of organization. They returned by the fords to the Warrenton road, protected, by my order, by Colonel Porter's force of regulars. Once on the road, and the different corps coming together in small parties, many without officers, they became intermingled, and all organization was lost.

"Orders had been sent back to Miles' division for a brigade to move forward and protect this retreat, and Colonel Blenker's brigade was detached for this purpose, and was ordered to go as far forward as the point where the road to the right left the main road.

"By referring to the general order it will be seen that, while the operations were to go on in front, an attack was to be made at Blackburn's Ford by the brigade (Richardson's) stationed there. A reference to his report, and to that of Major Hunt, commanding the artillery, will show that this part of the plan was well and effectually carried out. It succeeded in deceiving the enemy for a considerable time, and in keeping in check a part of his force. The fire of the artillery at this point is represented as particularly destructive.

"The enemy followed us from the ford as far as Cub Run, and owing to the road becoming blockaded up at the crossing, caused us much damage there, for the artillery could not pass, and several pieces and caissons had to be abandoned. In the panic the horses hauling the caissons and ammunition were cut from their places by persons to escape with, and in this way much confusion was caused, the panic aggravated, and the road encumbered. Not only were pieces of artillery lost but also many of the ambulances carrying the wounded.

"By sundown most of our men had gotten behind Centreville ridge, and it became a question whether we should or not endeavor to make a stand there. The condition of our artillery and its ammunition, and the want of food for the men, who had generally abandoned or thrown away all that had been issued the day before, and the utter disorganization and consequent demoralization of the mass of the army, seemed to all who were near enough to be consulted—division and brigade commanders and staff—to admit of no alternative but to fall back; the more so as the position at Blackburn's ford was then in the possession of the enemy, and he was already turning our left. On sending the officers of the staff to the different camps, they found, as they reported to me, that our decision had been anticipated by the troops, most of those who had come in from the front being already on the road to the rear, the panic with which they came in still continuing and hurrying them along.

"At —o'clock the rear guard (Blenker's brigade) moved, covering the retreat, which was effected during the night and next morning. The troops at Fairfax station leaving by the cars took with them the bulk of the supplies which had been sent there. My aid-de-camp, Major Wadsworth, stayed at Fairfax Court House till late in the morning, to see that the stragglers and weary and worn-out soldiers were not left behind.

"I transmit herewith the reports of the several division and brigade commanders, to which I refer for the conduct of particular regiments and corps, and a consolidated return of the killed, wounded, and missing.—From the latter it will be seen that our killed amounted to nineteen officers and four hundred and sixty-two non-commissioned officers and privates, and our wounded to sixty-four officers and nine hundred and forty-seven non-commissioned officers and privates. Many of the wounded will soon be able to join the ranks, and will leave our total of killed and disabled from further service under one thousand. The return of the missing is very inaccurate, the men supposed to be missing having fallen into other regiments and gone to Washington—many of the Zouaves to New York. In one brigade the number originally reported at six hundred and thirteen was yesterday reduced to one hundred and seventy-four. These reductions are being made daily. In a few days a more correct return can be made.

"Of course nothing accurate is known of the loss of the enemy. An officer of their forces, coming from them with a flag of truce, admitted eighteen hundred killed and wounded, and other information shows this to be much under the true number."

THE LOSS OF THE CONFEDERATES.

The Memphis Appeal's Manassas correspondent says:—It is gratifying to be able to state, upon reliable authority, that the total loss of the confederates in killed, wounded and missing, will not exceed the first estimate, say 2,500. Of these less than 500 are killed. It is believed very few have been taken prisoners.

GEN. M'CLELLAN.

The Philadelphia Press has a description of Gen. McClellan, as he appeared on his recent visit to that city:—

A few trembled, yesterday, at seeing, in the place of a gaunt, stalwart soldier, scarred and sage-eyed, a young man of moderate proportions, bright-eyed, and with boyish movements, and bearing not ponderous epaulets, chapeau and sword, but the simple regulation fatigue blouse with shoulder bars, a cap, and black pants trimmed with gold. Had we expected a smart, handsome cricketer, a litue, muscular student, a farmer, or any thing in common life, implying good spirits and a quick eye, we should have singled out Geo. B. McClellan. But as the leader of a grand army, the conqueror of a hostile section, the man who is to hold in hand the destiny of a nation and retreat or break its tortures, we could not recognise the sage for the youth, or the great soldier in the unassuming, boyish citizen.

THE AMERICAN WAR.

AN IRISH OPINION.

From the Dublin Nation.

As the news from America flows in, the language of the Northern and their journals tends more and more to disgust and outrage all who hold the sacred faith of human freedom, and to make them weep in poignant mortification and deep despair. Well may we despair of popular liberty in presence of the sight the world sees to-day. A republican people, whose liberties were won by a rebellion, whose independence was achieved by a secession, parrot as glibly as any minions of Old World tyranny "the rebels" and "the rebellion" as phrases of odium and reproach! Those who profess to hold sacred the popular will, to reverence the desire for self-government, proceeding to drown the popular will in blood, and to answer the desire for self-government by butchery and slaughter!

If what is now passing in America took place in any of the Old World empires, it would be at least intelligible. If the citizens of nearly half an empire five times as large as all Europe, with an unanimity never surpassed, and rarely equalled, declared by free poll, in open day, by universal suffrage, that their interests and their feelings demanded the substitution of the Imperial Government by one of their own choice; and that the Imperial Government marched its armies to crush the demand in the blood of the "rebels," it would be nothing new amongst despotic systems.

But in a great confederation of republican States,—in a system based on the will of the people—based on the right of rebellion—that all this should happen that we now see—that no tyranny or despotism of Old Europe ever drew the sword more savagely to put down "rebellion" and trample on the voice of the people, than this same Central Government of a Republican Confederation—it is enough to wring the heart of any man who believed in the greater humanity and toleration of popular Governments. Well may the advocates of despotic monarchy laugh in bitter mockery at those who believe that a people ruling themselves would never spill blood in popular subjugation, and that such murders were done only by kings and despots of Old Europe.

It is a hideous sarcasm on Republicanism to hear the journals of the Northern States yelling for the blood of "the rebels;" for their subjugation and destruction! "We mean to conquer them," says a Republican journal in New York, "not merely to defeat, but to conquer, to subjugate them But when the rebellious traitors are overwhelmed in the field, and scattered like leaves before the angry wind, it must not be to return to peaceful and contented homes. They must find poverty at their firesides and see privation to the anxious eyes of mothers and rags of children." Was ever more hellish sentiment uttered?

Where in the annals of despotism, or the records of its butcheries, shall we seek for a parallel to this? Where—even against rebels who had not a particle of justification? If the subjects of the most legitimate sovereign that ever held a sceptre had acted as the Southern States have done, would these sentiments not be infamous if uttered on his part? Yet infamy of infamies are they when uttered by republicans against brother republicans — uttered by the descendants of the rebels of '76, against men who with far greater unanimity now demand the self same right those rebles claimed—self-government.

We shall be told the South had no right to secede; therefore, war upon it is justifiable. When England made war upon her rebellious American Colonies, she said they had no right to "secede," and yet, therefore, that was justifiable. We shall be told the South can exhibit no wrongs to justify rebellion. The same was held by those who sought to crush the Colonies in their struggle for self-government. But why should we be called upon by Republicans to consider these points at all? Have we not been told, as the Republican principle, that the subjects of a State themselves, and no one else, are to be judges whether they have provocation, justification or right?

Yet, let us consider that the case of the South, as regards its right to secede, is far stronger than was that of the American Colonies to rebel. Under the old monarchical systems no such right was ever tolerated—no such principle ever heard of—as "the voice of the population" determining the justice, legitimacy, or duration of a Government. The American Colonies originated under that monarchical system. They had never claimed or possessed the attributes of Independent Sovereign States; nor had their connection with the English Crown originated in a compact having for object mutual benefit and defence.

What, on the other hand, is the position of the Southern States in the present case? They are not mere colonies, counties or districts of any State, kingdom or empire. They are a member of "Sovereign Independent States," so styled in law, and so proved in fact. Their political system—the political system of the whole United States of America—is based on the fundamental principle of the right of rebellion determinable by the voice of the people.—These several Independent Sovereign States, of their own free choosing, and for the purpose of their own and the common welfare, interest and protection, federate with certain others to this end.

A number of these States declare that faith has not been kept with them in the compact of confederation; and that the cause and purpose of their federal association with certain others no longer urge its continuance, but on the contrary demand its termination. Whether they possess the right to so terminate the connection, is neither asserted nor denied by the dead of union. This silence is claimed by each side in the quarrel as favorable to its own cause. Upon which side the construction may be said to weigh it, no doubt, a nice and intricate question for political doctrinaries and hair-splitting controversialists.

But what we have to say is this, that it is something more than ungrateful, it is monstrous, it is the grossest and most disgraceful treachery to humanity, that, on a point which must be ruled either way, the shedding upon it one drop of human blood must be seen of torrents of blood being made to flow in the conquest—the subjugation—of those independent States, who merely ask for self-government and freedom to decide their own destinies! We say it would be deplorable even if these Southern States were mere colonies or outlying districts of a despotic empire.

We say that, in the face of such a unanimous determination for secession—right or wrong, according to construction of constitutional technicalities—this bloody war to force union on the Southern people at the point of the sword—to saber them into brotherhood—dragoon them into "liberty"—is a blot upon humanity. We cannot pause to weigh the niceties of the rival constructions of the silence of the deed of Union with reference to the right of secession.

We turn in disgust from all this, denying that the proof at best can be plain enough to reconcile us to this butchery—butchery to be done, let us remember, not by kings, autocrats, or tyrants, but by Republicans, advocates of popular liberty—themselves the offspring of rebellion! We have often enough and clearly enough declared our anxiety that the great Republic of America might be saved from dismemberment; but for greater is our anxiety—for the the sake of the hideous reproach it involves to popular liberty—that it may be saved from the terrible crime of forcing its Federal embrace upon any State at the expense of ruthless slaughter by fire and sword

THE WAR AT THE WEST.

From Russell's Letters to the Times.

Cairo, June 22, 1861.

I visited the earthworks at the end of the levee. Col. Wagner was ill with the usual camp diarrhea, but he would insist on getting up and showing me his performance. He has fought in many hard fields in Europe, served in the Hungarian war, and accompanied Kossuth to the United States. His right hand man, Lieutenant O'Leary, was formerly a petty officer in the British Navy, served in the Furious in the Black Sea, and was in the Shannon Brigade, under the ever-to-be deplored sailor, who led them to the relief of Lucknow, and finally to the reduction of that ill-starred city. Mr O'Leary told me he was not much credited here when he recounted the manner in which Sir William Peel taught his sailors to toss about 68-pounders as if they were field-pieces. The work I found to be rather "crowded" with guns, but it gives promise of such strength as to enable the occupants to command both rivers effectually. The armament is quite adequate to all purposes, and consists of one 8-inch howitzer, two 24-pounders, two 32-pounders, and some lighter guns, the whole being dominated by a 10-inch columbiad in the centre, on a circular traversing slide, not yet mounted. The magazine is well made and lighted; it is the safest and best I have seen in the States. The practice I saw with a field-piece from the work at a small target 500 yards off, in order to try ricochet fire, was by no means bad, and would have speedily sunk a boat in the line of fire. Whenever a steamer is made out approaching Cairo a gun is fired from one or other of the posts. The steamer then gives the private signal agreed upon, and, if she does not answer, is fired upon and brought to by round shot. In the evening, as I was walking up and down the levee after a day of exhausting heat, an extraordinary tumult attracted my attention, and on running to the hotel whence the noise proceeded, I discovered a whole regiment drawn up two deep without arms, and shouting out in chorus, "Water! water! water!" The officers were powerless, but presently General Prentiss came round the corner, and mounting on a railing proceeded to address the soldiery in energetic terms, but in substance his remonstrance would have been considered, in a French or English army, as much a breach of discipline as the act it had censured.—These men had broken out of the barracks after hours, forced their officers and the sentries, and came up shouting to headquarters of their General to complain of a deficiency of water. The General addressed them as "Gentlemen." It was not his fault they wanted water. It was their officers who were to blame, not he. He would see they had water, and would punish the contractor, but they must not come disturbing him by their outcries at night. Their conduct was demoralizing to themselves, and to their comrades. Having rated the "gentlemen" soundly, he ordered them back to their quarters. They gave three cheers for the General, and retired in regular line of march with their officers.—The fact was that the men on returning from a hot and thirsty drill found the water barrels, which ought to have been filled by the contractor, empty, and not for the first time, and so they took the quartermaster's business into their own hands. Their officers did not wish to be very strict, and why? The term of the men's voluntary service is nearly over, they have not yet been enrolled for the service of the State; therefore, if they were aggrieved they might be disposed to disband, and not renew their engagements, and so the officers would be left without any regiment to offer to the State. But they went off in an orderly manner, and Gen. Prentiss, though much annoyed by the occurrence, understands volunteers better than we do. There is no doubt but that the Quartermaster's Department is in a bad condition in both armies. Mr. Forestall has proposed to the Southern authorities to hang any contractor who may be detected cheating. There would probably be few contractors left if the process were carried into effect at the North. The Medical Department is better in the Northern than in the Southern armies. But even here there is not an ambulance, a cacolet, or a mule litter.—When Gen. Scott made his first requisition for troops and money, or rather when he gave in his estimate of the probable requirements to carry on the war, I heard the Ministers laughed at his demands. They would be very glad now to condone for the original figures. Little do they know, North or South, what war must cost in money, in life, in misery. Already they are suffering, but it is but a tithe of what is to come, for the life and misery have not been expended and felt. In the Memphis papers two days ago I saw a notification that draughts would be issued by the magistrates to families left in distress by the departure of their heads and supports to the seat of war. In the Cairo papers to-day I observe an appeal to the authorities to do something to aid the citizens reduced to pauperism by the utter stagnation of trade.

— Numbers of Union families are moving out of Virginia. It is said that they have been ordered to leave by the secessionists, now that the country has been occupied by the latter since the Federal disaster at Bull's Run.

LOUIS NAPOLEON'S DESIGNS.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Herald says:—"The semi-official Patrie announces formally that 'all states in Europe have a right to judge that the South has a undoubted right to secede,' and states Napoleon the First's opinions upon that matter. The same journal, as well as all the Bonapartist organs, notice President Lincoln's Message in a most hostile and bitter tone, and twit us with the impossibility of our preventing events that are already accomplished. 'The South can never again enter the Union,' says the Patrie. From the co mmencement of the rebellion I warned you what were the tendencies of Napoleon III. As regards the South. He was aiming at some grand coup in Europe—some war, some interference in foreign policy—to keep his own people quiet: but he saw that to move in any direction was most dangerous. Revolution was near at hand, as follow upon the footsteps, and the Italians taught him that it was not an easy matter to free a people, and then keep them on a subjection but one degree removed from that he had aided them to overthrow. Pausing to look ere he leaped, the Southern rebellion broke out. Here he saw a chance to carry out his plans. Here was a fine occasion to cater to that military spirit so rife throughout his dominions. He would let the South and North mutually weaken each other, and then step in and acknowledging the South, proclaim a protectorate, assume, with England, a direct supervision, if not control, of the affairs of Mexico—in fact, establish in the New World colonies where France once possessed them. It should be the boast of his admirers that not only had he placed the empire upon so proud a footing in Europe, but that he had also regained for her vast possessions where she had had them before. Spain, encouraged by France, began the movement; and unless a speedy peace is entered into between the North and the South, the latter will soon have cause to bewail their hasty and suicidal course in breaking asunder bonds that were a guarantee for the welfare of all nations. Our great republic was, in its might, a terror to all despots and the refuge of their victims. The breaking up of so grand a power has caused a thrill of joy to run through the hearts of those who feared her grandeur and her example. They will do all they can to humiliate and debase her, unless she rises in that incalculable might she possesses and scatters to the winds the schemes of those who wish and plot her downfall.

THE NORTHERN TROOPS.

A New York journal shows, in the following extract, how wretchedly provided the federal troops were for going into action on the day of the battle, and what recklessness characterized the whole affair:—

"It was impossible for any troops to hold out long under the circumstances in which our soldiers were placed at Bull's Run on the 21st of July. The right wing had marched sixteen or eighteen miles on a cracker, to the battle field, under a broiling sun, and without water. Human nature could not stand it. Some of the troops bit their lips to cause the blood to flow, in order that they might moisten their parched tongues. Others took handfuls of clay which seemed to be moist and put it into their mouths to cool them. Others laid down and panted and foamed at the mouth like horses overcome with heat. Many, in order to obtain relief from the enemy, surrendered themselves prisoners of war. On the other hand, the Southern troops put to shame the filthy raiment of our ragged regiments. There is no excuse for this, while there is so much money at the command of the goverament. The effect upon the troops engaged is very bad. It has demoralized and disorganized them. We hope it will be the last time that such treatment of our gallant troops will ever occur. It is already once too often."

LORD JOHN RUSSELL'S ELEVATION TO THE PEERAGE.

The late Earl Ludlow, who owned a property at Cople, near Bedford, and was a political friend of John the sixth Duke of Bedford, contracted in the hunting-field a strong friendship with Francis, the late Duke. As he was a bachelor and had no near relations, he bequeathed to the Duke, at his death, in 1843, his Bedfordshire estate, and a very fine property called Ardsalla Castle, county Meath, which he had long held and seldom visited. The Earldom of Ludlow became, of course, extinct, and as the addition of some £4000 or £5000 a year in Irish land was a matter of little moment to the owner of the rentroll of Woburn and Tavistock, the duke resolved at his death not to let it pass with the Dukedom but to bestow it on his brother Lord John, to whom he was personally much attached. Ever since the late duke's death, it has been expected in the county of Meath that Lord John Russell would abandon politics and become a resident squire at Ardsalla, and some of the Irish papers have gone so far as to assert that the Earldom of Ludlow is the title by which he will shortly be called to the House of Peers. We have reason to know that the choice of any such title is at the very least premature, and on abstract grounds, it is most unlikely that his lordship should select a title to which he has no other claim than that of owning a property once owned by the earl of Ludlow. It is far more probable that he will not travel out of his own historic family, and we believe that we shall not be found to be far from the truth when we assert, that in all probability, within a week or two of the present date, the Gazette will announce that "Her Majesty has been most graciously pleased to summon John Russell, Esq., commonly called Lord John Russell, to the House of Peers, by the name, style, and title of Earl Russell of Ardsalla, in the county of Meath, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom."—London Spectator.

AMERICA AT THE NEXT WORLD'S FAIR.

A resolution has passed the Senate and House of Representatives, appropriating $2,000 in order that the President may adopt measures to secure a representation of the United States at the next World's Fair, to be held in London in 1862. A representative should be appointed as soon as possible, in order that he may make arrangements for the space required by American exhibitors. We do not expect that there will be many exhibitors from our country, but those who do go should be provided with good positions and the means to make a good display creditable to our country. The building for the World's Fair is now in the course of erection, and it is going up with that rapidity and system which were observed in the first Crystal Palace. It is expected that the exhibition will surpass all that has preceded it in the character of the mechanism and articles entered for competition.

THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.

Future generations will look back and dwell with interest upon the events now transpiring in the adjoining Republic. Like the events which took place during the revolt of the Colonies from the mother country, those which are now taking place will be noted by the historian and will afford lessons of instruction to the statesman, patriot, and moralist, from which, for the sake of our common humanity if from no higher motive, we should devoutly wish they may profit. In the war of Independence the Colonists were forced to revolt from the arbitrary and insolent conduct of the King and his unwise counsellors. No remonstrance from disobedient subjects of the unreasonable exactions imposed would be listened to, no assurance of devoted attachment to the land of their ancestry was of any avail, the King and his ministry—with a few honorable exceptions—denounced the colonists in America as rebels and as such they should pay the penalty for resisting legal authority. The haughty threats of vengeance were attempted but resulted in defeat, and the proud monarch was compelled, after a bootless attempt to reduce his refractory subjects, to acknowledge them as a distinct nation under the name of the United States of America. In this struggle the Colonists fought for their hearth, homes and lives, and could point very distinctly to the arbitrary and exacting measures of the King, who refused to acknowledge them as capable of having a say in measures deeply affecting themselves, as grounds justifying them in taking up arms. It was thus that a stupid King, to gratify his vanity, by attempting to punish when he should have listened and yielded, lost to his crown its fairest diadem. Like a foolish father attempting to reduce a refractory grown up son by corporeal punishment in place of persuasion, drives him away from home, whereas a course of remonstrance and conciliation would retain him. In the short period of 84 years the nation has grown from four millions to over thirty millions, has progressed equally in all the materials of greatness, and until very recently stood forth to the world as a triumph of popular government. The entire civilized world looked at the United States of America as demonstrating the great problem so often heretofore attempted in vain, of republicanism, and up to last November they were supposed to have succeeded. Since then the advocates of monarchial institutions have been loud in denouncing Republicanism, as a failure. And they have not done so without apparent good reason, for whatever may be the real cause of dissatisfaction, the ostensible cause that led to secession was one that cannot be justified by sensible men. If a portion of a nation cannot bear up under a constitutional political defeat, they thereby declare their want of the first principles of self-government. In this way the Southerners have made transparent to the world the degrading effects resulting from the "peculiar institution."—Accustomed from the nature of the connection between themselves and their servile dependents to be obeyed, impatient of contradiction, arbitrary and despotic, they become wayward and self-willed with their equals. A contradiction is tantamount to a challenge to fight. A deep thinker and an able writer in giving an opinion on the present crisis of America says "The Southern States are mastered by a passion which blinds them and prevents them from weighing their true interests and the dangers which threaten them. They are in a frame of mind which is the result of slavery. These men, accustomed to exercise daily despotic powers over their fellows cannot bear control, criticism or resistance. They draw a blind confidence from their heated and unruly tempers, and they so exaggerate their strength as really to imagine that they can bring the North to terms. Such is always the effect of the exercise of absolute power over ones fellow man." Accustomed to appoint the ruler of the nation, they could not put up with the appointment of the North, and hence they rush out of the Union, as if they had no more interest in it, and finding no resistance offered to their illegal conduct they became emboldened by delay, and assumed the offensive by driving out the federal troops from their borders. This act gave the North the advantage of not initiating hostilities, as well as a sort of legal acquittal when employing force to subdue the rebellion, so clearly committed by that act. It is now beginning to be viewed both in Europe and elsewhere as a grave error on the part of both South and North in taking up arms. If secession is possible under the Federal constitution it was wrong in the North in attempting to punish it. If it is illegal and contrary to the constitution it was wrong in the North not to check it at the outbreak. A mutiny is soon put down if prompt measures are employed but if dallied with it becomes fearful—so it has become with the seceded States. Four hundred thousand men and five hundred millions of dollars is a fearful price to pay to put down a rebellion that might have been nipped in the bud. The question however arises can it be put down? Can the North subdue the South? We think not; they may punish them, harass their armies, block up their ports, cut off their commerce, and burn their cities, but they can never bring back the Southern States to acknowledge their allegiance to a union that is severed. Neither the blood nor treasure in the North can bring back the Southerners, now maddened by the consequences of war, and we fear that both parties will have ample time to deplore the madness of each in the course they have pursued,—the South in going out of the Union and the North in attempting an impossibility, in vainly attempting to bring back seven revolted States to their allegiance. It is folly to speak of inflicting a nation like Our country to-day chronicle another great battle, and the anticipate many more will have to be fought, many brave and noble fellows bite the dust, and millions of treasure expended before the end mistake will be discovered. War is always terrible but a civil war like that raging over the line is tenfold more terrible. The deadly hate it begets among kinsmen resembles the hate of demons. We devoutly wish that the present war may soon terminate.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

LOSS ABOUT $80,000.

On Sunday night, about 10 o'clock, the stable and shed in rear of Chartrain's Saloon, on Water Street, caught fire, and before any alarm was raised the flames had burst through the roof. In less than half an hour the fire had spread to the Saloon, and soon the house occupied by Mr. Jenkins, and the frame store of Messrs. Nicholls & Hall were enveloped in the flames. It then became evident that the whole of the adjacent buildings would perish, and a panic ensued. George and Hunter streets were the situation of a most indescribable scene. Men, women and children were running to and fro, almost frantic, bearing armfuls of property, which every one seemed anxious to save. At about 11 o'clock no fewer than 10 buildings were burning, and the Town was illuminated so brightly that the smallest objects could be seen on some of the streets. On the more prominent buildings men were busily engaged in wetting the roofs and cornices to prevent danger from the burning embers. At 12 o'clock the flames had swept on from the brick building at the corner of Water street to that occupied by Messrs. J. B. Bisbee and John Campbell, and on George street from the brick store occupied by Messrs. I. Robinson & Co., to that of Mr. John Thomson. For a time those buildings were in imminent danger, but through great exertion and the fact that they were protected with iron shutters, and were otherwise fire-proof, they were saved. At about 1 o'clock, a. m., the two-story brick building on the corner of Hunter and Water streets was on fire; for a short time there was a hope that it might be saved, but from the scarcity of water the engine was rendered almost useless, and the flames gained till the whole block was in ashes. The stone store-house of Messrs. Nicholls & Hall, and the handsome brick building of the same firm, were saved by the most daring adventure and courage on the part of the clerks of the establishment, and other parties who came to their help. A brisk breeze struck up about 1½ o'clock, and the smoke and ashes were scattered in clouds down George and Simcoe streets, but the height of the fire was over, and no further spread took place. On the morning after the fire the scene was one of desolation,—what had but a day before been the best business part of the Town was now a heap of smouldering ruins.

The following statement of losses is, as nearly as we have been able to ascertain, correct:

Chartrain, $800.
Jenkins $100.
Rountree, $300.
Post Office.
T. Menzies, part of stock damaged.

John Thomson, (damage to goods, &c.) $300.
R. Walton, do., $300.
Templeton Brown, (building) $200.
Nicholls & Hall, (building and stock) about $3,500.

The value of several buildings, part of the estate of the late Thomas Harper, about $18,000.

All the mails were saved, and it is believed not one letter or paper was lost.

The parties insured, and the amounts of insurance, we are unable to ascertain accurately at the present writing, but the most part of the property was not insured.

Twenty-nine places of business in all were destroyed, and we deeply regret to say there are not six available stores to be let at the present time in the Town.

As to the origin of the fire there can be but one opinion. For some time previous a woman of disreputable character had taken shelter in the loft of the stable where the fire began, and as has been ascertained since, was drunk in or about the place at the time. This in the second large fire here that can be attributed to the same cause; few will have forgotten the burning on the east side of Water street, about two years ago. Yet people seem to be careless as ever, and such characters are allowed to inhabit the most dangerous localities.

The great lack of water was fearfully felt. A good-sized tank near the Post Office would have been the means of saving many times more property than its cost, but to this subject we will return at another time.

INCENDIARISM.

An old man named Andrews was taken before A. S. Fraser and Jas. Edwards, Esqrs., on Monday, charged with setting fire to a stable back of McCormick's Tavern, at noon on that day. After the examination of witnesses, Andrews was committed to Jail to await his trial on the serious charge of arson.

THE ARMY WORM.

The army worm about which we have heard so much lately, has made its appearance we regret to say in the Township of Otonabee. In size and form it resembles the ordinary caterpillar; is nearly black, with two or more green stripes, and has about twenty feet. Its mode of attack on the wheat stalk is peculiar. it makes its way up to the ear, where by a sideward, grinding process, it separates it from the stalk, when it shells the same of the kernels commencing at the top and proceeding downwards. Hay, oats, and grass seem dainty food for their wormships, and none but the green, succulent stalks are touched. Had this plague came upon us a week or two earlier the loss to our farmers would have been great.

THE ASHBURNHAM PIC-NIC.

The children attending the Ashburnham day and Sunday Schools were entertained by the Trustees to a finely-got-up Pic-nic to Rice Lake by the cars on Tuesday.—As the day was favorable, and the invitation extended to the parents, a large number availed themselves of the day's enjoyment. Upwards of 200, principally children, left by the train. On arriving at the Lake Mr. Madden, Wesleyan minister at the Indian Village, kindly offered the use of the Chapel to the party, which was accepted. However, as pic-nicking was to be the order of the day the ladies of the party insisted on having the edibles discussed outside. Accordingly impromptu tables were arranged from a neighboring pile of lumber, and the hidden contents of many a basket came to view in the shape of chickens, hams, sandwiches, &c., to all of which ample justice was done. The Rev. Messrs. Gilmour and Douglas were among the party and after the inner man had been satisfied these gentlemen addressed the children on the necessity of improving their time by study and application, pointing out to them that in a country like this the positions of honor and emolument were open to all alike. The day passed off most pleasantly and towards evening Colonel Haultain joined the party, having driven down in a carriage, being a few minutes too late to go by the cars. The Col. also addressed the children on the benefits of education, pointing out to them many examples of men who had risen to the highest positions in society with not half the chance of being educated that they had in these modern times.

Before entering the cars on returning the whole party gave three cheers for the Queen and a like number for the Prince of Wales, and off they started by the cars for Peterboro, or Ashburnham rather, where they all arrived safely. On landing on the platform three cheers were given for the Ashburnham School Trustees, after which

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Town Council met on Thursday night. A petition from Mr. Malcolm and others, asking the Council to cancel the order to pay $10 to Mr. Geoge Bell, was read and laid on the table. A petition from E. McCormick and others, praying the Council to re-appoint the constables who acted as night-watch, was read and referred to Committee. The petition of Mr. Malcolm and others was allowed to lie on the table!

The Mayor was instructed to insure the Town Hall.

A motion was passed fixing the Mayor's salary for this year at $500.

THE SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR,—In resuming the subject of Schools in Scotland, I feel that I am about to grapple with a giant error, and I scarcely know how to approach him without awakening the wolves, by which his woody wilderness is guarded. With himself I do not fear to deal, but to reach him is the difficulty. He is also so plausible, that his aim is able to conceal from most his true character, and walk abroad under some honourable name suited to the society to which he gains access. Before the Reformation when he lived among Princes and priests, he called himself order, but now finding the aristocracy ill able to defend their privileges, he pretends to be a Democrat, and courts the favor of the populace under the name of liberty. But though he has changed his name he has not changed his nature, which is licentiousness, and his motto has always been, that every man should do as he likes so far as he can. He is very busy just now in crying out against tests of all kinds, for nothing he likes worse than true religion in any shape. A ready I hear the wolves begin to howl; but arrayed in the mail of conscious integrity from which the poet Horace tells us, all such wolves must fly. I shall enter into his very den, and pierce him through the heart with the shafts of experience, and common sense. Here then I take my course. Every law of liberty must have a law of limitation, whether the planets in their orbits, money in circulation, or men under social order, or ecclesiastical state; and therefore I say liberty without law is licentiousness. To apply this to Schools. What is the land of limitation that circumscribes and guards the liberty of these institutions? It is called the Test Act, by which every Parochial schoolmaster besides knowing the common branches, and Latin, must also know and teach the Bible and Shorter Catechism. O, no, his friends cry out, we don't object to that, but to his being obliged to be a member of the established Church. But does his being a member of the Established Church oblige to any thing more than I have said. No, no, but we want our friends into the Parochial Schools, while retaining their present notions as to the civil government interfering with religious opinions. But has the government interfered with the religious opinions of the people for a hundred years past? No, but they refused to let us put our friends into the church livings without rendering any reason and putting out our enemies without showing cause. The whole dispute then is about the election and support of ministers. Yes, and is not that sufficient, to have a minister put in that we don't want, and the minister we do want kept out; and the minister we don't want not only put in but kept in till death or some other lucky accident frees us of him. But is not this precisely the case with the schools also? And what is the church but the school of the parent as the other is of the children? And if so I think the question has already been set at rest by universal agreement, except where it seems likely to interfere with our own individual interests. But you know "what is sauce for the goose,"—so let us take what we give, for that is fair play.—The real dispute then is not about the schools, but about the churches. Now, would it not be better to put the churches right that are wrong than to disturb the schools, which by mutual consent are admitted to be right already? The schools are good, the texts are good, and all that is wrong, is that the people cannot agree about the best mode of electing and supporting their ministers. Would it not then be a simpler plan to let the Schools alone which are right, and try to put the churches right, and then all will be right again as of old, when the school was regarded as a part of the church, and every church had its school just as every orchard has its nursery and every family makes provision for its children as for its adults. I have thus far unmasked the monster, and shall show you his end in my next, if you will give me leave, and the revival of that healthy education which is strengthened and nourished by the life blood of religion, and remain,

Mr. Editor,
yours truly,
AN OLD PAROCHIAL SCHOOLMASTER.

Another Great Battle.

NORTHERN ARMY VICTORIOUS.

We are indebted to Mr. Cox, Telegraph Operator here, for the following account of another great battle, the news of which arrived here yesterday afternoon:

On Saturday Gen. Lyon marched out of Springfield, Missouri, to give the enemy battle. He came up to them on Davis Creek, Bros's Prairie, a few miles to the south-west of Springfield. When he had taken a strong position on rolling ground, at twenty minutes to six, Gen. Lyon fired the first gun, when the battle immediately began. Severe cannonading was kept up for two or three hours, when the fire of Rollen's artillery proved too severe for the enemy; they gradually fell back to their encampment on Wilson's Creek. Gen. Lyon's cavalry posted on the enemy's left flank. Gen. Seigel's artillery on the right then began a terrific attack, and spread slaughter and dismay in the rebel ranks, pursuing them to their camps. Their tents, waggons and baggage were destroyed by shells. A Louisana and Mississippi regiment were almost annihilated. As Gen. Lyon was leading on his column his horse was shot under him. He immediately mounted another, and as he turned around to his men, waving his hand and cheering his men on to victory, he was struck in the small of the back by a ball, and he fell dead on the ground. The command then devolved on Gen. Seigel. Pursuit continued till night, when our little army rested for the night on the encampment of the enemy.—At the last moment of despatch the enemy has not been seen. Among the killed are Gen. Earl McCulloch and Gen. Price.—The sword and horse of Gen. McCulloch are among the trophies. The number of killed and wounded on the Federal side about 800. The numbers not given on the Confederate side.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT ON THE LAKE.

THREE YOUNG MEN DROWNED.

Some ten days ago, Mr. Pierce Morton, of this city, an ex-midshipman of the Royal Navy; Mr. Robert Holmes, of Hamilton; Mr. J. M. Mitchell, a law student of this city; whose friends reside at St. Mary's, Canada West, and Mr. William Gordon, brother of Mr. Gordon of the firm of Gordon & McKay, dry goods merchants, of Toronto, left this city for a cruise around the Lake, in the yacht Wave. On Monday night, during the heavy gale which was then blowing, they were on the return trip from Oswego, having touched at Kingston and Cobourg. About nine o'clock, when within a mile of the Island, Mr. Holmes, who was then "turning in," whilst the others were on deck managing the boat, perceived that she was leaking fast, and that in addition the

THE CENSUS OF IRELAND.

DECREASE OF ABOUT A MILLION IN TEN YEARS.

(Correspondence of the London Times.)

The abstracts of the census of Ireland for 1861 was issued to the Press here yesterday evening. The constabulary and the metropolitan police were the sole enumerators on the present occasion; 5,096 of the former and 173 of the latter were employed—a force which the peaceable state of the country enabled the Lord Lieutenant to place at the service of the Census Commissioners. No difficulties were experienced in taking the census on the night of the 7th of April, and in no instance had the Commissioners occasion to call into action the power granted them by the seventh section of the act; nor are they aware of any disturbing influence being in operation at the time.

The total population of Ireland on the 7th of April was 5,764,543, less by 787,842 than it was in 1851, which is a decrease of 12·02 per cent on the last decenial period. On the previous decade there was a decrease of 19·85 per cent. The diminution has been greatest in Munster, where it is 18 per cent, and least in Ulster, where it is only 5 per cent. The Commissioners ascribe the decrease to emigration, as there has been no other powerful cause in operating, such as famine, pestilence or war. From the report of the Emigration Commissioners it appears that 1,230,936 emigrants left Ireland during the last ten years; and, from the returns obtained by the Registrar-General of Ireland, it is found that of these 1,174,179 were set down as "permanent emigrants." We have, unfortunately, no registration of births and deaths, and we cannot tell what efforts nature has made to fill the void created by the famine.

The portion of the returns expected with most anxiety is that which relates to the religious denominations, of which we have had no return since 1834. In obtaining them returns the enumerators met every facility from the clergy and people, and as the Commissioners have had only fifteen complaints about them, they infer that they are nearly correct. The following are the result:—Roman Catholics, 4,490,583; members of the Established Church, 678,661; Presbyterians, 598,992; all other persuasions, 8,614; Jews, 332. The total number of Protestants in Ireland is 1,273,960, giving the Roman Catholics a majority of 3,226,624; or about three and a half Roman Catholics to one Protestant. In Ulster the proportions are—Established Church, 390,130; Presbyterians, 511,371; Roman Catholics, 983,966.

SEPARATION AT LAST.

From the returns handed in to the County Clerk at Peterboro', we learn that there are actually said counted votes of a majority in favor of separation of the counties of Peterborough and Victoria. In a few days we expect the Provisional Council will meet in Lindsay, to select a site for the county buildings and proceed with their erection. It seems to be the desire of all whom we have conversed on the subject that the county buildings should be erected somewhere about the Union School grounds.—Many think that if the buildings were erected on the high ground on the centre of Kent street with an allowance for a road on each side would have a fine appearance, and be most convenient for the transaction of public business. Lindsay after this is sure to prosper.—Victoria Herald.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA WEST.

This association met again at 9 o'clock yesterday morning in the lecture hall of the Mechanics Institute. The chair was occupied by the First Vice-President, A. McCallum, Esq., of Hamilton.

The first business taken up was the consideration of the following preamble to the constitution and by-laws, which after some discussion was adopted:—

The objects of this Association are,

1st. To secure the general adoption of the most approved system of imparting instruction.

2nd. To secure the improvement of our text books or the adoption of others more suitable to the wants of the country.

3rd. To enlarge the views of teachers and stimulate their exertions for the advancement and diffusion of knowledge.

4th. To encourage the frequent interchange of ideas and kindly intercourse among the members of the profession throughout the country.

The meeting adjourned at 12 o'clock and reassembled at 2 o'clock.

The Rev. Dr. Burns then delivered a most excellent dissertation on the educational duties of teachers and the qualifications they should possess to mould and develop the tender minds of those who may be entrusted to their care with a view to their physical, moral and intellectual culture.—The Reverend Dr. concluded with his very able address amid the hearty applause of the members of the Association.

The following officers of Association were then appointed for the ensuing year:

President—Rev. Dr. McCaul, President of University College; 1st Vice-President—A. McCallum, Head Master, Central School, Hamilton; 2nd do—J. Herbert Sangster, A. M. Normal School; 3rd do J. B. Boyle, Head Master, Central School, London; 4th do—Thomas McKee, do do Oshawa; 5th do—Thos. Nixon, Superintendent, Newmarket; 6th do—W. Anderson, Head Master, Park School, Toronto; Mr. Alexander, Treasurer; Mr. Acres, Secretary.

COUNCILLORS FOR COUNTIES—Ontario, Mr. Kobins; Middlesex, Mr. Anderson; Peel, Mr Morton; Hastings, Mr McShea; Stormont, Mr Hay; Halton, Mr Brackenridge; Oxford, Mr. Vardon, Brant, Mr. McFarlane; Northumberland, Mr Young.

HERE AND THERE.

The St. Catherines Evening Journal, says it must have more paying patronage (i. e., advertising) or suspend publication. It says it has as many subscribers (not of the Billy-Barlow stripe, either) as it wants; but that subscribers alone don't pay. The Journal's want, we are sorry to say, is a very common want just now in Canada.—Advertisements have become "like angel's visits, few and far between." It is always so in dull times, however—many people being under the delusion that advertising is only useful to them when business is brisk. The very reverse is the truth, as the experience of all wide-awake merchants shows.—Such, however, is the popular error in Canada.

We have before us two Australian papers—the Melborne Argus, forwarded by Mr. J. G. Gray, formerly of this city, and a Beechworth Constitution—filled with advertisements. Mr. Gray has two or three columns to himself. Business is, nevertheless, dull in Australia as well as here; but business men there would no sooner think of giving up advertising than they would dream of ordering their own coffins. Thus they not only keep alive, but grow fat, catching all the stray fish left in the stream, by keeping their hooks always in the water. The papers, too, "keep on the even tenor of their way," and never die out for want of support. Let Canada go and do likewise.—Hamilton Times.

TIMBER TRADE OF CANADA.

Speaking of this subject the Quebec Chronicle says:—

"As illustrative of what the combined action of the Government and the trade may accomplish towards opening up new markets for our immense lumber production, we are glad to be in a position to state that one firm alone has, this year, sold as ten cargoes of sawed lumber for ports in the north of France, and that they could sell four times that number if they could furnish the stuff required. Other firms also have orders for cargoes to Toulon, Havre, Bordeaux, Marseilles, Antwerp and Bremen. We learn also that a cargo of oak and masts has been shipped for Bergen in Norway. The opening up of new markets is the more agreeable this year, as our cousins across the frontiers are more desirous of purchasing revolvers and rifles than scantling and boards.

"We hope the Government and the trade will continue their exertions in opening up the markets of Europe for the productions of our forests, and we see no reason why we should not do a large trade, particularly with the ports on the Mediterranean."

THE BARON DE VIDIL.

Truth is stranger than fiction, as every day proves. No novelist would venture to invent a story like that of Baron de Vidil, which is now occupying a considerable space in the English papers, for the simple reason that it would be thought too improbable even for romance. This Vidil was a glover in London where he captivated and married an English lady with a fortune of £30,000. This lucky stroke so commended him to Louis Philippe, then King of France, that he made him a Baron and gave him some diplomatic appointment. The subsequent history of the Baron we need not trace; suffice it to say, he was a lounger about fashionable resorts, and probably needed all the money he could get. The Baron has a son, doubtless by his marriage, who has a considerable fortune in his own right, which would revert, in the case of death to the father; and as they were riding together in the outskirts of London, the Baron took advantage of passing through an unfrequented lane, to strike his son two heavy blows, probably with a loaded whip-handle, on the head. The son fell, but rose and ran to some labourers for protection; and the father followed him, greatly excited, saying, the youth had been thrown by his horse. The medical testimony shows that this could not be the case, and the Baron gave various versions of the affair; he has, therefore, been committed for trial, although the son, who is recovering, persistently refuses to give any evidence in the case.

IMPORTANT INVENTION IN AGRICULTURE.

Under this title the Dumfries Courier makes the following statement:—"About a mile to the north of Kirtel, there lives a man who is most eccentric in his manners, and lives a life characteristic of perfect oddity (if the expression is allowed.) This man has long been looked upon by the people of the surrounding district as no better in his intellectual attainments than a mere idiot, and in his external appearance as if fitted for nothing better than a scare-crow. But, though odd and idiot like he appears, he has proved himself to be a man of high intellectual attainments, by the invention of an instrument that will ever be held as a boon to agriculture while it is practiced as an art. This invention is a subsoil plough, but far different from anything of the kind we have ever seen or heard of. It is so constructed as to go 18 inches deep, 9 broad, and can be drawn by two horses with all manner of ease and freedom, and it matters but little though the land has been a cart-road for years, it will go through it with as much ease as though it were a field of sand. This plough is so simple in its construction that a smith of any kind will make it in ten hours. What advantage will the farmer gain from such an instrument? A great ease to his horses; the cost of it nothing in contrast to any other of the kind. We would recommend all farmers who have it in their power to go and see it, as it is impossible to speak of its advantages in so few words. It can be seen any day on the farm of Flatfield, about two miles from Errol Station."

AN ENGINE DRIVER'S PRESENCE OF MIND.

The Stettin (Prussia) newspapers mention an instance of heroic presence of mind, which deserves to be known wherever railways exist. A passenger train, coming from Altdam, in full speed, was running direct into the river Oder, at a place where it is 20 feet deep, in consequence of a mistake on the part of the points-man at the crossing. An engine driver, one Kampke, of Konigsberg, who was on a siding, with a locomotive and two waggons of goods for discharging it to a boat on the river, saw the mistake and the danger. Without a moment's hesitation, he put on full steam, and, rushing forward, charged the coming train. The shock was tremendous, but the passenger train was brought to a stand still without the slightest injury to any one.

NOT SO HASTY.

It is said that Seward and Wm. H. Russel, correspondent of the London Times, were recently engaged in earnest conversation on the difficulty in this country, when Seward in answer to some remark of Russell's, jumped up, and in an excited tone, exclaimed: "Sir, the recognition by England and France of the independence of the Confederate States would be regarded by the United States Government as a war declaration." "Before you talk of war with two such powers as England and France," coolly replied the Englishman, "you had better retake Sumpter."

CLERICAL JOE MILLERS.—Of an English bishop the following story is told:—His lordship was examining a candidate for holy orders, who was more deficient in theology than in brains. Among other questions, the bishop asked him: "If you were in company with persons who impugn the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, how would you defend it?" "My lord, I feel hurt by your supposing that I keep such company." "If, however you were accidentally to find yourself in the company of unitarians, and they were to attack you, what course would you pursue?" "Can you doubt, my lord, what I should do? I should, of course, leave the room instantly." The story is paralleled by the Oxford anecdote of the under-graduate who under similar circumstances in his divinity examination, on being asked which were the greater prophets and which were the less, replied that "he could not venture to draw invidious distinctions."

☞ The increase of temperature in descending into the crust of the earth has been repeatedly verified. At a mine 700 yards deep, in Dukinfield, England, a mean increase has been found of 1° in 76.8 feet. Arago found an increase of 1° in 59 feet. At Rehnie, in an Artesian well 760 yards deep, the increase was found to be 1° in 54.7 feet; other experiments have given 1° in 71 feet. The observations are effected by the percolation of water and by the varying conducting power of the rocks. This increase would, at 40 feet, give a temperature of some 3,000° which would melt the hardest rocks. It is not yet, however, known what effect the enormous pressure experienced at such depths may have on the melting point of the rocks. On independent bases, Mr. Hopkins has been led to the belief that the earth's crust is 800 miles thick, and the Archdeacon of Calcutta, in his observations on the plumb-line in India and the effect of the Himalayas upon it, estimates the crust at 1,000 miles in thickness.

BRINGING COALS TO NEWCASTLE.—It is one of the most curious incidents of the war, that two ships are now on their way from England to this country, laden, the one with two hundred and the other with four hundred bales of cotton, purchased for our Northern manufacturers, who are unable to obtain their usual supplies at the South. This is carrying coals to Newcastle after an entirely new fashion.—N. Y. Herald.

A CANADIAN LITERARY PAPER.

FOR

The Canadian People.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. ☜

ON Saturday 1st June last, the undersigned commenced in Toronto the publication of a weekly family newspaper, entitled

"The Home Journal,"

which altogether eschews subjects of a controversal character, both in politics and religion, and professes itself as a medium for developing the literary talent of the country.

The Home Journal is devoted to choice literature:—Tales, Essays, Poetry, Reviews, Criticism, Biography, Art, Music, News, &c., and has already enlisted in its columns some of the best talent of the country.

To commence the publication of a Literary Journal in Canada, after many failures of similar enterprises, was considered hazardous; but the undersigned is now happy to say, after five weeks of experience, that he has received such encouragement from both the press of the country and the public, as causes him to feel quite confident of his ultimate success.

He aims at making the Home Journal equal to any paper of its class, and to do this, a large number of subscribers are necessary. Believing that the people of Canada will contribute to its maintenance, when made aware of its importance and character.

The Home Journal is published every Saturday, at Toronto, and mailed in time to reach the remotest parts of the Province, on the date of publication.

The terms of subscription are $1.50 in advance. Payments may be made as follows:—For four months, 50 cents; for eight months, $1; for twelve months, $1.50

Any person sending the names of five subscribers, with their subscriptions, will be entitled to one copy, and the undersigned trusts to receive from his friends throughout the country, many remittances according with this arrangement.

All letters and communications should be addressed (post-paid), to Publisher, Osborne Street.

VISIT OF

DR. LA'MERT

OF LONDON,

TO THE NORTH AMERICAN PROVINCES.

DR. LA'MERT of Bedford Square, London, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, &c; author of "Self-preservation," the "Science of Life," and "Second Life," begs to intimate to his Patients and the Public that he proposes in August, making a Professional visit to the British North American Possessions, commencing with Halifax, N. S.; and that he will afterwards visit St. John, N.B., and Lower and Upper Canada.

Due notice will be given in future advertisements of Dr. La'Mert's arrival and of his place of residence in the several towns in which he may be consulted, either personally or by correspondence. In making this intimation, Dr. La'Mert wishes to point out to patients the advantages that invariably result from a personal interview, and the mutual facilities that will be afforded to those who are desirous of bringing their cases under his immediate notice. Dr. La'Mert, moreover cannot too strongly urge on those who have already been under his care, or who may now be in correspondence with him, the propriety of the occasion that will present itself of clearing up any doubts that may have existed in regard to their cases, and would particularly impress upon them the importance of putting themselves as quickly as possible into personal communication with him during his necessarily limited stay, which under no circumstances can be prolonged beyond the dates hereafter to be announced.

In order that no obstacle may be presented to the completion of the treatment of such cases, Dr. La'Mert will be provided with the correspondence, notes, &c., connected with each individual case in the Colonies that has come under his observation during the last three years. Those who contemplate availing themselves of Dr. La'Mert's services are recommended, in the interim, to procure from one of the undermentioned local agents his work on a Medical Treatise on Nervous Debility and Functional Weakness, more particularly in reference to the liabilities and disorders of the Generative System, with numerous Engravings and Descriptive Essays.

Self-Preservation;

The object of the work is not to maintain any particular hypothesis, but to enable every one to understand for himself the structure and functions of the organs concerned in the fulfilment of the Physical Obligations of the Married State; to acquaint him with the consequences arising from excesses; to prevent unnecessary misapprehension from astounded fears; and to point out, when those fears are well founded, the means of speedy relief. The work is not crowded with the technicalities so ordinary professional books, nor does it present the crudeness which characterises the so-called "popular works" on the subject.

"Self-Preservation" may be had in a sealed envelope, price One Shilling sterling, of Messrs Clubb and Co., St John, N. B.; E. G. Fuller, Express Agent, Halifax, N.S.; or the Author will forward it, post free, on receipt of Colonial postage stamps to the amount of 18 pence sterling. 32

Lightning! Lightning!

PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.

300,000 Feet

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINTS!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Come on iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

$1,000 CHALLENGE!

to the world to produce as good a Rod for the same price, as the Galvanized Rod, which we are now prepared to offer to the public through our authorised agents; allow no man to protect your buildings who has not our certificate of agency, with caution on the back against impositions. PIPER & KINDALL,
83 Young Street.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

Prof. of Chemistry.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely endorse in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Rook Street.

Agricultural.

WHY DON'T THEY FARM BETTER!

We have lately visited a district where restless farming has done its worst, and where improved husbandry has not yet put footprints of the Speeder. The devastations of war are not half so hard upon land as the spoliations of these peaceful Goths and Vandals, whose weapons of destruction are the plow-share and the scythe. The invading army kills cattle and men, and sometimes burns dwellings and barns. But the following years beholds the dwellings rebuilt, and the pastures again stocked with cattle. But what long periods it takes to restore the ruin of an improvident husbandry. An army of land-skinners, holding possession for a single generation, makes the land so poor that it will sustain neither cattle nor man. They turn regions of plenty into the barrenness of a desert.

Here are thousands of acres of once fertile land, so stript and plundered that grasshoppers would starve upon their scanty herbage. They were once covered with heavy timber, oak, chestnut and hickory which never grew upon poor land. When the forest was cleared, wheat, corn and potatoes grew as luxuriantly as upon the prairies of the West. That virgin soil would be worth a hundred dollars per acre to-day. The denuded subsoil can now be had for ten dollar per acre, and is dear at that.

Just examine an acre and you shall find full one-half of it sore patches with not a weed or living thing upon it. Here is a cluster of starved fire fingers, there a stray stalk of pennyroyal, and yonder a patch of moss. Here is a lost yearling's mother stalk, and around it a patch of starveling young plants, struggling between life and death; and there is a solitary spear of grass making an abortive attempt to blossom. It will never mature seed. There is not a solitary clover plant or blade of herdgrass on the acre.

Then here is an adjoining patch that they dignify as mowing land. There is grass here, for the land has had within the last three years five loads of manure to the acre, and from this little stock of fertility a crop of corn and oats has been taken. But what grass! It will not yield more than half a ton of rushtop to the acre, which barely pays the expense of harvesting.—The pasture is kept so wretchedly poor that ten acres would not feed a cow during the summer. White birches and scrub oaks, the inevitable sign of land-used land, are intruding upon these old pastures, as if to hide their deformity.

The land nearer the barn of course gets a little more manure, and looks a little better; but even here, thirty bushels of corn to the acre and a ton of hay is more than the average yield.

Now what are the people thinking of that they don't farm better? It may be that some of them do not know any better. For agricultural journals are by no means universal in this region, and model farmers are few and far between. But still some of the people do take the papers, and there are a few who farm well, raise premium cattle and crops, and exhibit them. It must be that this people have a great deal more light than they make use of in their business.

* * * * * *

They have no faith in farming as a paying business. So they do not invest any surplus capital in barn cellars, in subsoil plows and drain tile, in muck swamps and bone dust, in improved stock and seeds. They regard the capital invested in land as a very sure thing, because the land will not run away. But capital invested in the improvement of the land they look upon as very insecure.

We have been trying for a twelvemonth to get a man of capital to reclaim a few acres of light sandy loam, within a few rods of his barn, and immediately adjoining a good deposit of muck. The land, as it lies, does not pay him the interest on five dollars an acre. The drawing of muck and the grass seed might cost him twenty dollars an acre. This would make the land worth at least fifty dollars an acre, for it would pay the interest on that sum, if kept permanently in grass. The amount in excess we crave was to secure an outlay of fifty cents for grass seed, which was duly sown upon the mud and harrowed in. The very condition in which we had promised success, viz., the spreading of the muck, was omitted. The seed will probably spring up, and wither in the drought of summer, for want of earth, and confirm the experimenter in the belief of the utter unprofitableness of farming.

These poor worn-out lands want manure, in some form, and must have it, or they can never be made profitable. Some of them, those which lie remote from muck swamps and the barn, can best be renovated by plowing in green crops, buckwheat or clover. Others can be economically replenished by muck and stable manure. The foundation of profitable farming on these lands is the manure cellar. Money invested in a manure factory, and the materials to run it, will be well invested. If managed with only tolerable skill, we will warrant it to pay better than any bank stock in the State. With this and the muck muses, forty dollars worth of manure may be made annually for every one horse or ox upon the farm, if kept in the stables, or half that sum if pastured in summer. More faith in the business would make much better farming.—Ct. Homestead.

THE SOIL BREATHES.

Certainly it does, just as t ily as you do. A few years since; if one asserted that trees had lungs and breathed, he would have been held to an argument to prove it; just as a few years earlier nobody would have believed that a fish's gills, and the leaves of a tree, and the lungs of a beast, all perform the same office, that of aerating the blood or sap. The soil breathes. How does it breathe? In circulating fluid, the blood on the soil, is water; this comes to it from the air, and is already aerated. True but soon become its system by contact with the soil just as the arterial blood fresh from the lungs, loses its oxygen when passing its circuit all parts of the body. The blood comes back to the lungs for more oxygen, but the blood of the soil cannot do this, so we must let the air in, to come in contact with it.—We cannot here explain the working of the soil, but would then briefly enforce the necessity of stirring the soil during drought as deeply as practicable, not to interfere with the roots of growing plants and those of previous culture, so that a deep and light soil shall invite a free circulation of air beneath the surface. Hot air the moment it presses beneath the surface, becomes very moist, from the water which it originally contained, as it deposits it, then not only nourishes the soil, but adding to its moisture. Who has not noticed of a winter's day, a locomotive leaving behind it a many closed of vapor, like a comet's tail, often floating for a minute after the train has passed!—Think of this and watch the steam cars on days, when the hot breath just as full of water as in winter, is puffed out into the eye of the sun, and not steam enough above to make a shadow—it is so quickly absorbed by the air.—Homestead.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYANT'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing. Public speakers need no pair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the Vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, still more confirm the tone, and give flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the
"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"
have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x26 inches, entitled,

"PALSTAFF RECRUITING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to

The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscription. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, announced as the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular prices 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, free of charge, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tesseo, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nations, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and Mexico, and it was there that the "MOUNTAIN HERB TEAS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and as the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! If you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which run a hay rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, death must follow in some direction.

These pills act not partly the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivaled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, clearing and renovating the vital organs.

Persons inclined, in fit to un, that we are able to place reliable proof to such a statement. The "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body and secure the cure desired. Others will not, and we caution the public against imposition.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, TUMORS, BLOTCHES, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruption if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even when no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well. But with the pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrations of Sarsaparilla, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contained little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,
FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S and take no others. The sick want the best and there is for them, and they should have it.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the human system! To the excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of liquids; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially they power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one great remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

ALBION HOTEL, MONTREAL.

L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its genus. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

CARRIAGES! BUGGIES! &c., &c., &c.

E. O'HILL would call the attention intending purchasers to the fact that he has a large stock of Carriages & Buggies of his manufacture, and the best material, which he can warrant to be good, and solicits a call as his wishes to sell Cheap for Cash, or short approved credit, to make room for a large stock for the coming year. Repairing neatly done, and with dispatch, opposite Lawson's Hotel, Brock Street. Give him a call.

INFORMATION WANTED.

A DAUGHTER wishes to learn the present whereabouts of her mother, whom she has not seen for the last thirty-five years. Her maiden name was Polly Cook; her first husband's name was Warren Stone. It is said she married in 1826, a person named De Long, who was at that time engaged in some way in the manufacture of ashes, in some part of Upper Canada. Any information respecting her will be gratefully received by addressing the advertiser, at 55 Frank Street, Rochester, W. Canadian papers will confer a favour upon one who has long been deprived of a mother's affection, by giving the above an insertion, and/or one in part.

Poetry.

"THE LAST WORDS OF MY MOTHER."

The last words of my mother
Ere her spirit winged its flight,
As we stood beside her bedside
On that sad and fearful night,
Still live within my memory—
Are my guide and comfort here,
And tell me that her spirit
Ever watches o'er me here.

It seemed as if the sunshine
Had been taken from the day,
When I saw the dismal hearse
Bear her pallid form away;
And, oh! the burning anguish
That did toss my youthful breast,
How longed I to lie by her
And to be with her at rest.

But when within the silence
Of my room I prayed to God
That he would take me with her
And lay me 'neath the sod,
The last words of my mother
Fell like music on my ears,
And soothed my early sorrow
And swept away my tears.

The First Offence.

In the cheering dining-room of my bachelor friend, Stevenson, a select party were assembled to celebrate his birth-day. A very amiable discussion had been carried on for some time, as to whether the first deviation from integrity should be treated with severity or lenity. Various were the opinions, and numerous were the arguments brought forward to support them. The majority appeared to lean on the side of "crush all offences in the bud," when a worm hearted old gentleman exclaimed,

"Depend upon it, more young people are lost to society from a first offence being treated with injudicious severity, than from the contrary extreme. Not that I would pass over even the slightest deviation from integrity, either in word or deed; that would certainly be mistaken kindness; but on the other hand, neither would I punish with severity an offence committed, perhaps under the influence of temptation—temptation, too, that we ourselves may have thoughtlessly placed in the way, in such a way as to have rendered it irresistable.—For instance, a lady hires a servant, the girl has hitherto borne a good character, but it is her first place; her honesty has never been put to the test. Her mistress, without thinking of the continual temptation to which she is exposing a fellow creature, is in the habit of leaving small sums of money, generally coppers, lying about her usual sitting room. After a time she begins to think that these sums are not always sums upon the girl which there is no [illegible] the room every morning. Her mistress, however, thinks that she will be quite convinced before she brings forward her accusation. She counts the money carefully at night, and the next morning some is missing. No one has been in the room but the girl; her guilt is evident. Well, what does her mistress do? Why, she turns the girl out of her house at an hour's notice; cannot in conscience, give her a character; tells all her friends how dreadfully distressed she is; declares there is nothing but ingratitude to be met with among servants; and never dreams of blaming herself for her wicked—yes, it is wicked—thoughtlessness, in thus constantly exposing to temptation a young ignorant girl; one most likely whose mind, if not enveloped in total darkness, has only an imperfect twilight knowledge whereby to distinguish right from wrong. At whose door, I ask," continued he, growing warmer, "will the sin lie, if that girl sinks into the lowest depths of vice and misery. Why at the door of her who after placing temptation in her very path, turned her into the pitiless world, deprived of that which constituted her only means of obtaining an honest livelihood—her character; and without one effort to reclaim her—without affording a single opportunity of retrieving the past, and resuming by future good conduct the confidence of her employer."

"There is, I fear, too much truth in what you say," remarked our benevolent host, who had hitherto taken no part in the conversation; "and reminds me of a circumstance that occurred in the earliest part of my life, which, as it may serve to illustrate the subject you have been discussing I will relate." There was a general movement of attention; for it was a well known fact that no manufacturer in the Town of ——— was surrounded with so many and faithful servants as our old friend Stevenson.

"In the outset of my business career," said he, "I took into my employment a young man to fill the situation of under clerk; and, according to a rule I had laid down, whenever a stranger entered my service, his duties were of a nature to involve as little responsibility as possible, until sufficient time had been given to form a correct estimate of his character. The young man, who I shall call Smith, was of respectable family. He had lost his father, and had a mother and sisters in some measure dependant upon him. After he had been some time in my employment it happened that my confidential clerk, whose duty it was to receive the money from the bank in the payment of wages, being prevented by an unfortunate circumstance from attending at the proper time, sent the sum required by Smith. My confidence was so great in my head clerk, who had been long known to me, that I was not in the habit of regularly counting the money when it was brought it to me; but on this occasion, as it had passed through other hands, I thought it right to do so. Therefore calling Smith back as he was leaving the Counting-house I desired him to wait a few minutes, and proceeded to ascertain whether it was quite correct. Great was my surprise and concern on finding that there was a considerable deficiency.

"From whom," said I "did you get this money?"

He replied, "From M———, naming my confidential clerk.

"Is it strange," said I, looking steadily at him,—"but this money is incorrect, and it is the first time I have found it so. He changed countenance, and his eyes fell before mine: but he answered with tolerable composure, "that it was as he had received it."

"It is in vain," I replied, "to attempt to impose upon me, or to endeavor to cast suspicion on one whose character for the strictest honesty and undeviating integrity is so well established. Now I am perfectly convinced that you have taken this money, and that it is at this moment in your possession; and I think the evidence against you is sufficient to justify me in dismissing you from my service. But you are a very young man: your conduct has I believe been hitherto perfectly correct, and I am willing to afford you an opportunity of redeeming the past. All knowledge of this matter rests between ourselves. Candidly confess the error of which you have been guilty; restore what you have so dishonestly taken; endeavor by your future good conduct to deserve my confidence and respect, and this circumstance shall never transpire to injure you.

The poor fellow was deeply affected.—In a voice almost inarticulate he confessed his guilt, and said that having frequently seen me receive the money without counting it, on being entrusted with it himself, the idea had flashed across his mind that he might easily abstract some without incurring suspicion, or at all events without there being sufficient evidence to justify it; that being in distress the temptation had proved stronger than his power of resistance, and he had yielded. I cannot now be continued, "prove how deeply your forbearance has touched me; time alone can show that it has not been displaced." He left me to resume his duties.

"Days, weeks, and months had passed away, during which I had scrutinized his conduct with the greatest anxiety, while at the same time I guarded against any appearance of watchfulness; and with delight I observed that so far my experiment had succeeded. The greatest regularity and attention—the utmost devotion to my interests—marked his business habits; and this without any display; for his quiet and humble deportment was from that time remarkable. At length finding his conduct invariably marked by the utmost openness and plain-dealing, my confidence in him was so far restored that on a vacancy occurring in a situation of greater trust and increased emolument than the one he had hitherto filled, I placed him in it; and never had I the slightest reason to repent of the part I had acted towards him. Not only had I the pleasure of reflecting that I had, in all probability saved a fellow-creature from a continued course of vice and consequent misery, and afforded him the opportunity of becoming a respectable and useful member in friend. For years he served me with the greatest devotion. His character for truth, nay, even scrupulous honesty, was so very well known, that "honest as Smith" became a proverb among all his acquaintances. One morning I missed him from his accustomed place, and upon inquiry learned that he was detained at home by indisposition. Several days elapsed and still he was absent; and upon calling at his house to enquire after him I found his family in great distress on his account. His complaint had proved to be typhus fever of a malignant kind. From almost the commencement of his attack, he had, as his wife (for he had been some time married) informed me, lain in a state of unconsciousness, from which he had roused only to the ravings of delirium and that the physician gave little hopes of his recovery. For some days the continued in the same state; at length a message was brought to me stating that Mr. Smith wished to see me; the messenger added that Mrs. Smith hoped I would come as soon as possible, for she feared her husband was dying. I immediately obeyed the summons.

"On entering the chamber, I found the whole of his family assembled to take farewell of him they so tenderly loved. As soon as he perceived me, he motioned me to approach near to him, and taking my hand in both of his he turned towards me his dying countenance, full of gratitude and affection. "I have sent for you that I may give you the thanks and blessings of a dying man for all your goodness to me. To your generosity and mercy I owe it, that I leave to my children a name unsullied by crime, that in after years the blush of shame shall never tinge their cheeks at the memory of their father. "O God!" he continued "thou who hast said, 'Blessed are the merciful,' bless him. According to the measure he has meted to others, do thou mete unto him. My beloved wife and children, I intrust you without fear, to the care of that heavenly Parent who has said, 'Leave thy fatherless children to me, and I will preserve them alive,' and let the widow trust in me.' And you dear master, will, I know, be to them as you have been to me, guide, protector, and friend." "That," continued the old man, looking around us with glistening eyes, though mixed with sorrow, was one of the happiest moments of my life." As I stood by the bedside of the dying man and looked around upon the children growing virtuous, intelligent and upright, respecting, honoring, as much as they loved their father; when I saw his wife, though overcome with grief for the loss of a tender and beloved husband, yet sorrowing not as one without hope, but even at that moment of agony deriving comfort from the belief that she should meet him again where

"Adieus and farewells are sad words."

When I listened to his fervid expressions of gratitude, and saw him calmly awaiting the inevitable stroke, trusting in the mercy of God, at peace with his fellow men; and when I thought that the reverse of all this might have been—crime, misery and a dishonorable life; perhaps a shameful and violent death—had I yielded to the first impulse of indignation—I felt a happiness no words can express. My friends, I am an old man. During a long and eventful career in business, I have had intercourse with persons of almost every variety of temper and disposition, and with many degrees of talent, but I have never found reason to swerve from the principle with which I set out in life, "to temper justice with mercy."

GIVING AWAY A CHILD.

On board one of the lake-steamers, bound for the far West, were an Irish family—husband, wife and three children. They were evidently in very destitute circumstances; but the exceeding beauty of the children—two girls and a boy—was the admiration of their fellow passengers. A lady who had no children of her own, was desirous of adopting one of the little travellers, and made application to the father, through a friend, who gives the following touching, and, as we suppose, truthful account of the negotiations:—

I proceeded, he says, immediately upon my delicate diplomacy. Finding my friend on deck, I thus opened the affair:

"You are very poor."

His answer was very characteristic.

"Poor, sir!" said he, "say, if there's a poorer man than me troublin' the world, God pity both of us, for we'd be about requail."

"Then how do you manage to support your children?"

"Is it supporting them, sir? Why, I don't support them any way; they get supported some way or other. It'll be time enough for me to complain when they do.

"Would it be a relief to you to part with one of them?"

It was too sudden; he turned sharply around.

"A what, sir?" he cried; "a relief to part from my child? Would it be a relief to have the hands chopped from the body, or the heart torn out of my breast? A relief indeed! God be good to us, what do you mane?"

"You don't understand me," I replied.—"If now, it were in one's power to provide comfortably for your children, would you stand in the way of its interest?

"No, sir," said he; "the heavens knows that I would willingly cut the sunshine away from myself, that they might get all the warm of it, but tell us what you're drawing at."

I then told him that a lady had taken a fancy to one of his children; and, if he would consent, it should be educated; and finally settled comfortably in life.

This threw him into a fit of gratulation. He scratched his head and looked the very picture of bewilderment. The struggle between a father's love and a child's interest was evident and touching. At length he said:

"O, murther, wouldn't it be a great thing for the baby? But I must go and talk to Mary—that's the mother of them; and it wouldn't be right to be givin' away her children afore her face, and she to know nothing at all about it."

In about half an hour he returned, leading two of his children. His eyes were red and swollen, and his face pale with excitement and agitation.

"Well, I inquired, "what success?"

"Bedad, it was a hard struggle, sir, said he. "But I've been talking to Mary, and she says, as it's for the child's good, maybe the heavens above will give us strength to bear it."

"Very well; and which of them is it to be?"

"Faix, and I don't know," and he ran his hands dubiously over both.

"Here's little Norah—she's the oldest; and won't need her mother so much; but then—O, tear an' aigers, it's myself that can't tell which I'd rather part with least; so take the first one that comes, with a blessing. There, sir," and he handed over little Norah; turning back, he snatched her up in his arms, and gave her one long hearty father's kiss, saying through his tears:

"May God be good to him tha 's good to you, and them that offers you hurt or harm, may their souls never see Saint Peather."

Then, taking his other child by the hand, he walked away leaving Norah with me.

I took her down to the cabin, and we thought the matter settled. It must be confessed, to my indignation, however, in about an hour's time I saw my friend Pat at the window. As soon as he caught my eye he began making signs for me to come out. I did so, and found that he had the other child in his arms.

"What's the matter now? I asked"

"Well, sir," said he, "I ask your pardon for troubling you about so foolish a thing as a child or two, but were thinkin't that it maybe make no differ—you see, sir, I've been talkin' to Mary, an' she says she can't part with Norah, because the crature has a look or me; but here's little Biddy, she's purtyer far an ar' you please, sir, will you swap?"

"Certainly; whenever you like," said I.

So he snatched up little Norah, as though it was some recovered treasure and darted away with her, leaving Biddy; who remained all night; but lo! the moment we entered the cabin in the morning, there was Pat making his mysterious signs again at the window, and this time he had the youngest, a baby, in his arms.

"What's wrong now?" I inquired.

"Be the hokey fly, sir, an' it's meself that's almost ashamed to tell ye. Ye see I've been talkin' to Mary, and she didn't like to part with Norah; because she has a look of me, an' be me soul, I can't part with Biddy, because she's the model of her mother; but there's little Paudeen, sir.—There's a lump of a Christine for you, two years old, and not a day more; he'll never be any trouble to any one; an' he takes after his mother, he'll have the brightest eye, an' ar be taken after his father he'll have a fine broad pair of shoulders to push his way through the world. With you swap again, sir?"

"With all my heart," said I "it is all the same to me;" and so little Paudeen was left with me.

"Ha, ha," said I to myself, as I looked into his big laughing eyes, "so the affair is settled at last."

But it wasn't; for ten minutes had scarcely elapsed, when Pat rushed into the cabin without sign or ceremony, snatched up the baby, and said:

"Its no use; I've been talking to Mary an' we can't do it. Look at him, sir; he's the youngest an' the best of the batch.—You wouldn't keep him from us. You see sir, Norah has a look of me an' Biddy has a look of Mary; but, be me soul, little Paudeen has the mother's eye an' my nose an' a little of both of us all over. No, sir, we can bear hard fortune starvation, an sil-ery, but we can't bear to part with our children, unless it be the will of Heaven to take them from us"

ALWAYS AT WORK.

A few days since, Mr. Gallaudet was walking the streets of Hartford, when a boy running to him a poor boy, of very ordinary appearance, but whose fine, intelligent eye fixed the attention of the gentleman, as the boy inquired—

"Sir, can you tell me of a man who would like a boy to work for him and learn him to read?"

"Whose boy are you, and where do you live?"

"I have no parents," was the reply, "and I have just run away from the workhouse because they would not teach me to read."

The gentleman made arrangements with the authorities of the town, and then took the boy into his own family. There he learned to read. Nor was this all. He soon acquired the confidence of his new associates by faithfulness and honesty. He was allowed to use his friend's library and made rapid progress in the acquisition of knowledge.

It became necessary after a while that George should leave Mr. Gallaudet, and he became apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in the neighborhood. There the same integrity won for him the favor of his new associates. To gratify his inclination for study, his master had a little room furnished for him in the upper part of the shop, where he devoted his leisure time to his favourite pursuits. After being in this situation a few years, sitting at tea with the family one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France.

"Go to France!" said his master, surprised that the apparently contented and happy youth had thus suddenly become dissatisfied with his situation; "for what?"

"Ask Mr. Gallaudet to tea to-morrow evening," continued George, "and I will explain."

His kind friend was invited accordingly. At tea when the apprentice presented himself, with his manuscripts—in English and French—and explained his singular intention to go to France.

"In the time of Napoleon," said he, "a fancy, or whatever it was, French government never been awarded, and that method I have discovered."

He then demonstrated his problem, to the surprise and gratification of his friends, who immediately furnished him with the means of defraying his expenses, and with letters of introduction to the Hon. Lewis Cass, then our Minister to the Court of France.

He was introduced to Louis Phillipe, and in the presence of the king, and nobles, and plenipotentiaries, the American youth demonstrated his problem, and received the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, which he had clearly won, besides several presents from the king.

He then took letters of introduction, and proceeded to the Court of St. James, and took up a similar prize, offered by the Royal Society, and returned to the United States. Here he was preparing to secure the benefits of his discovery by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose ministers had witnessed his demonstrations at London, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian Court, and furnishing him with ample means for his outfit.

He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburg, and is now a Professor of Mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the Autocrat of all the Russias.

THE PARSEE—THE JEW—AND THE CHRISTIAN.

A Jew entered a Parsee temple, and beheld the sacred fire. What! said he to the priest, do ye worship the fire? Not the fire, answered the priest; it is to us an emblem of the sun and of his genial heat. Do ye then worship the sun as your god? asked the Jew. Know ye not this luminary also is but the work of that Almighty Creator?

We know it, replied the priest; but the uncultivated man requires a sensible sign in order to form a conception of the Most High. And is not the sun, the incomprehensible source of light, an image of that invisible Being who blesses and preserves all things?

The Israelite thereupon rejoiced. Do your people, then, distinguish the type from the original? They call the sun their god; and descending from this to a baser object, they kneel before an earthly flame! Ye assume the outward, but blind the inward eye; and while ye hold to them the earthly ye withdraw the heavenly light! Thou shalt not make unto thee any image or any likeness.

How, then, do ye designate the Supreme Being? asked the Parsee.

We call him Jehovah Adonai, that is the Lord who is, who was, and who will be, answered the Jew.

Your appelation is grand and sublime, said the Parsee; but it is awful too.

A Christian then drew nigh and said, we call him Father.

The Pagan and the Jew looked at each other, and said, Here is at once an image and reality. It is a word of the heart, said they.

Therefore they raised their eyes to heaven, and said, with reverence and love, "Our Father!" And they took each other by the hand, and all three called one another brothers!—Drs. P. A. Krummacher.

For the Examiner.

THE GOSPEL MINISTRY AND THE TIMES.

What is the character of the preaching by which the Church is sought to be edified now? Is the ministry what it ought to be? Has it lost some of the power once belonging to it. It cannot be denied that there has been a great change effected in the method and style of preaching compared now-a-days from that of the Apostles, of the Reformers, and of the sons of the English Puritans and Covenanters of Scotland, when the preacher commanded an influence which Kings and Rulers quailed, and which moved assembly, trembling from all pleasure. In our day the power of the pulpit has to a very great extent been reduced to popularity. The preacher of the present day may wield a keener blade than the men of former times did, but it is evident to the most unobservant of observers, that he does not cut as deep with it. He may be a good accomplished swordsman, nevertheless it is true that he does not do the same amount of execution which his earlier prototype did. He may glitter and shine more than these mighty thinkers of their time had the power to do, but while they made their audience cry out and pray, the modern preacher-hearer only admires and praises him.

By the power of the pulpit I do not mean its attractiveness. To have a congregation amused, entertained, &c., and returning again and again to be put through the same process, is not preaching the Gospel, and yet it is true such forms the greater part of the preaching of the Dress and Show and Sabbath-breaking reign supreme, and when we look at the daily walk of professed Christians one would imagine that the chief end of man's existence was frivolity. It may be affirmed that there are more Churches at this day filled Sabbath after Sabbath in America and England than there ever has been at any one period before, and yet it is believed that the pulpit is losing its power more and more. Is there a Luther alive upon the earth to-day? Has Calvin's mantle fallen on the shoulders of any one, and does any of our modern preachers command the power which John Owen, or William Romaine, or John Bunyan or a Toplady wielded? One who knew well what he said has employed the following language in reference to the pulpit and its occupants: "As things stand at present our Creeds and Confessions are become effete, and the Bible a dead letter, and many of the ministers of the popular sects of the day are more bent on the pursuit of dollars and popularity than on saving souls."

Christianity is indulging in fashions, and fashionable places, in the literal sense of the word, among the mazes of the seductive dance. You may find Christians among the foremost and the most frivolous, and what are many of the popular and decorated churches of the day but one large emporium of the fashions of the day.

And the sermons you hear! They are like the pleasant sounds of one who can play well on an instrument. Once McCree and Chalmers thundered in Edinburgh and Mason and McLeod in New York. But what are preachers doing now? If they were doing their duty now as it ought to be done, would not a more successful onset be made on the evils of the day which threaten to carry away all virtue and religion out of the land.

MENTOR.

Smith, August 17, 1861.

THE EXHIBITION OF 1862.

The brick walls are now more than 30 feet high; the floor of the picture gallery is being laid, and the skeleton of the eastern end of the great structure is now mapping out in piles of brown columns, with some interlacings of trellis and face girders, the number and extent of which visibly grow with every hour's labor. Before August much of the second story will be completed, and even the massive arches which span the nave will be turned across and in their places. The immensely increased rapidity with which iron structures of the most enduring kind can be run up as compared with those of brick or stone is shown by the way in which the metal portions of the building have progressed over the picture gallery. The latter part of the structure, though begun long before the rest, is only about 30 feet high, while in some parts the iron work is upwards of fifty feet. The works connected with the picture gallery are however, of no ordinary magnitude and substance, for all connected with this portion of the building is most massive, as may be imagined from the fact that three walls have already consumed over 6,000,000 bricks, and will require nearly 12,000,000 more to complete them. Upwards of two miles of little tramways intersect the ground in all directions, and along these a couple of men can move a truck with four or five tons of girders at a far greater speed than six or eight horses could move them in a waggon. With the same view a small powerful steam engine is placed in the centre of the works, and connected by a network of ropes passing through pulleys over all parts of the ground. By means of these loads are drawn about the tramways, wrought-iron and girders bolted and bolted in their places, with amazing rapidity and ease.—But the most astonishing of these labor-saving contrivances is a gigantic travelling scaffold, which has been built on twelve wheels, to run up and down the whole length of the navel. This huge structure is 60 feet square and 100 feet high, and weighs nearly three hundred tons. Yet four men with levers can move it almost quickly to any part of the works. It will be used in hoisting the upper columns, the huge wrought cast-iron ribs of the roof for painting, or, indeed, for any purpose connected with the building where so large mass has to be employed at a great height. Messrs. Kelk and Lucas are confident that they will be enabled to finish the building prior to the 1st May next, it is said. As regards other matters connected with the intended display everything is progressing in a most satisfactory manner. The local and the trade committees have been formed throughout the United Kingdom, and are every where working well. In 1851 there were, at the opening of the building, 8,000 exhibitors. Already the Commissioners have received the names of upwards of 6000, and others come in daily. On the continent the interest Exhibition is regarded with the utmost favour. France, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Belgium are officially active in the cause, and the latter country has evinced its interest by which has double the amount of space it had in 1851. Already 1,500 have been awarded. In Russia the Emperor has appointed two commissioners, one for the north and one for the south of his gigantic empire. Only three governments decline to have anything to do with it. These are Turkey, Rome, and Morocco. Nevertheless some superb works from Rome are expected from individual exhibitors. Nothing is expected from America. The Commissioners communicated with the Federal Government some time since, but the usual notice has not, we believe, been sent round to the Governors of each state, as it was not thought wise to do so in the present rabid temper of the Northerners. As a set-off to the secession of Turkey, the government of Egypt is exerting itself warmly; and that on the whole, all is going well, and promises an even greater success than that which attended our first great international effort in Hyde Park.—Times.

A man in Maine applied for two gallons of rum "for mechanical purposes." "For what mechanical purposes?" inquired the agent. "For raising a barn."

An old lady, being at a loss for a pincushion, made one of an onion. On the following morning she found that all the needles had tears in their eyes.

"Jake," said a old farmer one day to one of his mowers, "do you know how many horns there are in dilemma?" "No," said Jake, "but I know how many horns there are in a quart of whiskey."

My opponent, Mr. Speaker, persists in saying that he is entitled to the floor.—Whether this be so or not, I shall not inquire. All I have got to say is, that whether he is entitled to the floor or not, he'll get floored if he interrupts me again." Here the gentleman from Bloody Creek pulled up his sleeves and took his necktie off.

At the examination of a parochial school a reverend gentleman was asking a class the meaning of words. They answered well, till he gave "backbiter." This was a puzzler. It went down the class till it came to a simple little urchin, who looked sheepishly knowing, and said, "It may be a flea."

A young lady who wore spectacles, exclaimed in a trance of sentimental enthusiasm, to Irishman, who was walking on the road, "Do you, sir, appreciate the beauty of that landscape? Oh, see those darling sheep and lambs—those blogs, miss."

Poetry is said to be the flower of literature; prose is the corn, potatoes and meat; satire is the aquafortis; wit is the spice and pepper; love-letters are the honey and sugar; letters containing remittances are the apple-dumplings.

A wag observes that the reason ladies make the best theatrical managers is, probably because a woman is obliged to be so much more careful than a man in choosing the company she keeps.

CHANGE OF NAME.—It may be proper to state that the distinguished individual known among the ancients as Cupid, has recently changed his name to Capidity, and will hereafter devote his attention to matters of money, as well as matrimony.

"Pa, I planted some potatoes in our garden," said one of the smart youths of the generation to his father, "and what do you suppose came up?" "Why, potatoes, of course." "No, sir-ee! There came up a lot of bugs and eat them all." "Then you will have to make the building over to the tax collector, that will give us."

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
D. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences, hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

CARRIAGES! BUGGIES! &c., &c., &c.

E. C. HILL would call the attention of intending purchasers to the fact that he has a large stock of Carriages & Buggies of his manufacture, and the best material, which is can warrant to be good, and solicits a call as he wishes to sell Cheap for Cash, or short approved credit, to make room for a large stock the coming year. Repairing neatly done, and with dispatch, opposite Lawson's Hotel, Brock Street. Give him a call.

INFORMATION WANTED.

A DAUGHTER wishes to learn the present whereabouts of her mother, whom she has not seen for the last thirty-five years. Her maiden name was Polly Cook; her first husband's name was Warren Stone. It is said she married in 1849, a person named De Long, who was at that time engaged in some way in the manufacture of salt, in some part of Upper Canada. Any information respecting her will be gratefully received by addressing the subscriber, at 58 Frank Street, Rochester, N. Y.—Canadian papers will confer a favour upon one who has long been deprived of a mother's affections, by giving the above an insertion, entire or in part.

Poetry.

"THE LAST WORDS OF MY MOTHER."

The last words of my mother
Ere her spirit winged its flight,
As we stood beside her bedside
On that sad and fearful night,
Still live within my memory—
Are my guide and comfort here,
And tell me that her spirit
Ever watches o'er me here.

It seemed as if the sunshine
Had been taken from the day,
When I saw the dismal hearse
Bear her pallid form away;
And, oh! the burning anguish
That did toss my youthful breast,
How longed I to lie by her
And to be with her at rest.

But when within the silence
Of my room I prayed to God
That he would take me with her
And lay me 'neath the sod,
The last words of my mother
Fell like music on my ears,
And soothed my early sorrow
And swept away my tears.

The First Offence.

In the cheering dining-room of my bachelor friend, Stevenson, a select party were assembled to celebrate his birth-day. A very amiable discussion had been carried on for some time, as to whether the first deviation from integrity should be treated with severity or lenity. Various were the opinions, and numerous were the arguments brought forward to support them. The majority appeared to lean on the side of "crush all offences in the bud," when a warm hearted old gentleman exclaimed,

"Depend upon it, more young people are lost to society from a first offence being treated with injudicious severity, than from the contrary extreme. Not that I would pass over even the slightest deviation from integrity, either in word or deed; that would certainly be mistaken kindness; but on the other hand, neither would I punish with severity an offence committed, perhaps under the influence of temptation—temptation, too, that we ourselves may have thoughtlessly placed in the way, in such a way as to have rendered it irresistable.—For instance, a lady hires a servant, the girl has hitherto borne a good character, but it is her first place; her honesty has never been put to the test. Her mistress, without thinking of the continual temptation to which she is exposing a fellow creature, is in the habit of leaving small sums of money, generally coppers, lying about her usual sitting room. After a time she begins to think that these sums are not always found exactly as she left them. Suspicion falls upon the girl, whose duty it is to sweep the room every morning. Her mistress, however, thinks that she will be quite convinced before she brings forward her accusation. She counts the money carefully at night, and the next morning some is missing. No one has been in the room but the girl; her guilt is evident. Well, what does her mistress do? Why, she turns the girl out of her house at an hour's notice; cannot in conscience, give her a character; tells all her friends how dreadfully distressed she is; declares there is nothing but ingratitude to be met with among servants; and never dreams of blaming herself for her wicked—yes, it is wicked—thoughtlessness, in thus constantly exposing to temptation a young ignorant girl; one most likely whose mind, if not enveloped in total darkness, has only an imperfect twilight knowledge whereby to distinguish right from wrong. At whose door, I ask," continued he, growing warmer, "will the sin lie, if that girl sinks into the lowest depths of vice and misery. Why at the door of her who after placing temptation in her very path, turned her into the pitiless world, deprived of that which constituted her only means of obtaining an honest livelihood—her character; and without one effort to reclaim her—without affording a single opportunity of retrieving the past, and regaining by future good conduct the confidence of her employers."

"There is, I fear, too much truth in what you say," remarked our benevolent host, who had hitherto taken no part in the conversation; "and reminds me of a circumstance that occurred in the earliest part of my life, which, as it may serve to illustrate the subject you have been discussing I will relate." There was a general movement of attention; for it was a well known fact that no manufacturer in the Town of ——— was surrounded with so many and faithful servants as our old friend Stevenson.

"In the outset of my business career," said he, "I took into my employment a young man to fill the situation of under clerk; and, according to a rule I had laid down, whenever a stranger entered my service, his duties were of a nature to involve as little responsibility as possible, until sufficient time had been given to form a correct estimate of his character. The young man, who I shall call Smith, was of respectable family. He had lost his father, and had a mother and sisters in some measure dependent upon him. After he had been some time in my employment it happened that my confidential clerk, whose duty it was to receive the money from the bank in the payment of wages, being prevented by no unfortunate circumstance from attending at the proper time, sent the sum required by Smith. My confidence was so great in my head clerk, who had been long known to me, that I was not in the habit of regularly counting the money when to be brought it to me; but on this occasion, as it had passed through other hands, I thought it right to do so. Therefore calling Smith back as he was leaving the Counting-house I desired him to wait a few minutes, and proceeded to ascertain whether it was quite correct. Great was my surprise and concern on finding that there was a considerable deficiency.

"From whom," said I "did you get this money?"

He replied, "From M———, naming my confidential clerk.

"It is strange," said I, looking steadily at him—"but this money is incorrect, and it is the first time I have found it so. He changed countenance, and his eyes fell before mine: but he answered with tolerable composure, "that it was as he had received it."

"It is in vain," I replied, "to attempt to impose upon me, or to endeavor to cast suspicion on one whose character for the strictest honesty and undeviating integrity is so well established. Now I am perfectly convinced that you have taken this money, and that it is at this moment in your possession; and I think the evidence against you is sufficient to justify me in dismissing you from my service. But you are a very young man: your conduct has I believe been hitherto perfectly correct, and I am willing to afford you an opportunity of redeeming the past. All knowledge of this matter rests between ourselves. Candidly confess the error of which you have been guilty; restore what you have so dishonestly taken; endeavor by your future good conduct to deserve my confidence and respect, and this circumstance shall never transpire to injure you.

The poor fellow was deeply affected.—In a voice almost inarticulate he confessed his guilt, and said that having frequently seen me receive the money without counting it, on being entrusted with it himself, the idea had flashed across his mind that he might easily abstract some without incurring suspicion, or at all events without there being sufficient evidence to justify it; that being in distress the temptation had proved stronger than his power of resistance, and he had yielded. I cannot now be continued, "prove how deeply your forbearance has touched me; time alone can shew that it has not been displaced." He left me to resume his duties.

"Days, weeks, and months had passed away, during which I had scrutinized his conduct with the greatest anxiety, while at the same time I guarded against any appearance of watchfulness; and with delight I observed that so far my experiment had succeeded. The greatest regularity and attention—the utmost devotion to my interests—me ted his business habits; and this without any display; for his quiet and humble deportment was from that time remarkable. At length finding his conduct invariably marked by the utmost openness and plain-dealing, my confidence in him was so far restored that on a vacancy occurring in a situation of greater trust and increased emolument than the one he had hitherto filled, I placed him in it; and never had I the slightest reason to repent of the part I had acted towards him. Not only had I the pleasure of reflecting that I had, in all probability saved a fellow-creature from a continued course of vice and consequent misery, and afforded him the opportunity of becoming a respectable and useful member in society, but I had gained for myself an infriend. For years he served me with the greatest devotion. His character for truth, nay, even scrupulous honesty, was so very well known, that "honest as Smith" became a proverb among all his acquaintances. One morning I missed him from his accustomed place, and upon inquiry learned that he was detained at home by indisposition. Several days elapsed and still he was absent; and upon calling at his house to enquire after him I found his family in great distress on his account. His complaint had proved to be typhus fever of a malignant kind. From almost the commencement of his attack, he had, as his wife (for he had been some time married) informed me, lain in a state of unconsciousness, from which he had roused only to the ravings of delirium and that the physician gave little hopes of his recovery. For some days he continued in the same state; at length a message was brought to me stating that Mr. Smith wished to see me; the messenger added that Mrs. Smith hoped I would come as soon as possible, for she feared her husband was dying. I immediately obeyed the summons.

"On entering the chamber, I found the whole of his family assembled to take farewell of him they so tenderly loved. As soon as he perceived me, he motioned me to approach near to him, and taking my hand in both of his he turned towards me his dying countenance, full of gratitude and affection. "I have sent for you that I may give you the thanks and blessings of a dying man for all your goodness to me. To your generosity and mercy I owe it, that I leave to my children a name unsullied by crime, that in after years the blush of shame shall never tinge their cheeks at the memory of their father. "O God!" he continued "thou who hast said, 'Blessed are the merciful,' bless him. According to the measure he has meted to others, do thou mete unto him. My beloved wife and children, I intrust you without fear, to the care of that heavenly Parent who has said, 'Leave thy fatherless children to me, and I will preserve them alive, and let the widow trust in me.' And you dear master, will, I know, be to them as you have been to me, guide, protector, and friend." "That," continued the old man, looking around us with glistening eyes, "though mixed with sorrow, was one of the happiest moments of my life." As I stood by the bedside of the dying man and looked around upon the children growing virtuous, intelligent and upright, respecting, honoring, as much as they loved their father; when I saw his wife, though overcome with grief for the loss of a tender and beloved husband, yet sorrowing not as one without hope, but even in that moment of agony deriving comfort from the belief that she should meet him again where "Adieu and farewell! are unknown."

When I listened to his fervid expressions of gratitude, and saw him calmly awaiting the inevitable stroke, trusting in the mercy of God, at peace with his fellow men; and when I thought that the reverse of all this might have been—crime, misery and a disgraceful life; perhaps a shameful and violent death—had I yielded to the first impulse of indignation—I felt a happiness no words can express. My friends, I am an old man. During a long and eventful career in business, I have had intercourse with persons of almost every variety of temper and disposition, and with many degrees of talent, but I have never found reason to swerve from the principle with which I set out in life, "to deport justice with mercy."

GIVING AWAY A CHILD.

On board one of the lake steamers, bound for the far West, were an Irish family—husband, wife and three children. They were evidently in very destitute circumstances; but the exceeding beauty of the children—two girls and a boy—was the admiration of their fellow passengers. A lady who had no children of her own, was desirous of adopting one of the little travellers, and made application to the father, through a friend, who gives the following touching, and, as we suppose, truthful account of the negotiations:—

I proceeded, he says, immediately upon my delicate diplomacy. Finding my friend on deck, I thus opened the affair:

"You are very poor."

His answer was very characteristic.

"Poor, sir!" said he, "ay, if there's a poorer man than me troublin' the world, God pity both of us, for we'd be about ecquall."

"Then how do you manage to support your children?"

"Is it supporting them, sir? Why, I don't support them any way; they get supported some way or other. It'll be time enough for me to complain when they do."

"Would it be a relief to you to part with one of them?"

It was too sudden; he turned sharply around.

"A what, sir?" he cried; "a relief to part from my child? Would it be a relief to have the hands chopped from the body, or the heart torn out of my breast? A relief indeed! God be good to us, what do you mane?"

"You don't understand me," I replied.—"If now, it were in one's power to provide comfortably for your children, would you stand in the way of its interest?

"No, sir," said he; "the heavens knows that I would willingly cut the sunshine away from myself, that they might get all the warm of it, but tell us what you're drawing at."

I then told him that a lady had taken a fancy to one of his children; and, if he would consent, it should be educated; and finally settled comfortably in life.

This threw him into a fit of gratulation. He scratched his head and looked the very picture of bewilderment. The struggle between a father's love and a child's interest was evident and touching. At length he said:

"O, murther, wouldn't it be a great thing for the baby? But I must go and talk to Mary—that's the mother of them; and it wouldn't be right to be givin' away her children afore her face, and she to know nothing at all about it."

"Argy with you, then, said I, "and [illegible] if possible."

In about half an hour he returned, leading two of his children. His eyes were red and swollen, and his face pale with excitement and agitation.

"Well, I inquired, "what success?"

"Bedad, it was a hard struggle, sir, said he. "But I've been talking to Mary, and she says, as it's for the child's good, maybe the heavens above will give us strength to bear it."

"Very well; and which of them is it to be?"

"Fair, and I don't know," and he ran his hands dubiously over both.

"Here's little Norah—she's the oldest; and won't need her mother so much; but then—O, tear an' agers, it's myself that can't tell which I'd rather part with least; so take the first one that comes, with a blessing. There, sir," and he handed over little Norah; turning back, he snatched her up in his arms, and gave her one long hearty father's kiss, saying through his tears:

"May God be good to him tha 's good to you, and them that offers you hurt or harm, may their souls never see Saint Peter."

Then, taking his other child by the hand, he walked away leaving Norah with me.

I took her down to the cabin, and we thought the matter settled. It must be confessed, to my indignation, however, in about an hour's time I saw my friend Pat at the window. As soon as he caught my eye he began making signs for me to come out. I did so, and found that he had the other child in his arms.

"What's the matter now? I asked"

"Well, sir," said he, "I ask your pardon for troubling you about so foolish a thing as a child or two, but were thinkin't that it maybe make no differ—you see, sir, I've been talkin' to Mary, an' she says she can't part with Norah, because the crature has a look or use; but here's little Biddy, she's purtyer far an ay' you please, sir, will you swap?"

"Certainly; whenever you like," said I.

So he snatched up little Norah, as though it was some recovered treasure and darted away with her, leaving Biddy; who remained all night; but lo! the moment we entered the cabin in the morning, there was Pat making his mysterious signs again at the window, and this time he had the youngest, a baby, in his arms.

"What's wrong now?" I inquired.

"Bad the hokey fly, sir, an' it's meself that's almost ashamed to tell ye. Ye see I've been talkin' to Mary, and she didn't like to part with Norah; because she has a look of me, an' be me soul, I can't part with Biddy, because she's the model of her mother; but there's little Paudeen, sir.—There's a lump of a Christian for you, two years old, and not a day more; he'll never be any trouble to any one; ar he takes after his mother, he'll have the brightest eye, an' ar he takes after his father he'll have a fine broad pair of shoulders to push his way through the world. Will you swap again, sir?"

"With all my heart," said I "it is all the same to me;" and so little Paudeen was left with me.

"Ha, ha," said I to myself, as I looked into his big laughing eyes, "so the affair is settled at last."

But it wasn't; for ten minutes had scarcely elapsed, when Pat rushed into the cabin without sign or ceremony, snatched up the baby, and said;

"It's no use; I've been talking to Mary an' we can't do it. Look at him, sir; he's the youngest an' the best of the batch.—You wouldn't keep him from us. You see sir, Norah has a look of me an' Biddy has a look of Mary; but, be me soul, little Paudeen has the mother's eye an' my nose an' a little of both of us all over. No, sir, we can bear hard fortune starvation, an robery, but we can't bear to part with our children, unless it be the will of Heaven to take them from us."

ALWAYS AT WORK.

A few days since, as Mr. Gallaudet was walking the streets of Hartford, there came running to him a poor boy, of very ordinary appearance, but whose fine, intelligent eye fixed the attention of the gentleman, as the boy inquired—

"Sir, can you tell me of a man who would like a boy to work for him and learn him to read?"

"Whose boy are you, and where do you live?"

"I have no parents," was the reply, "and I have just run away from the workhouse because they would not teach me to read."

The gentleman made arrangements with the authorities of the town, and then took the boy into his own family. There he learned to read. Nor was this all. He soon acquired the confidence of his new associates by faithfulness and honesty. He was allowed to use his friend's library, and made rapid progress in the acquisition of knowledge.

It became necessary after a while that George should leave Mr. Gallaudet, and he became apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in the neighborhood. There the same integrity won for him the favor of his new associates. To gratify his inclination for study, his master had a little room furnished for him in the upper part of the shop, where he devoted his leisure time to his favourite pursuits. After being in this situation a few years, sitting at tea with the family one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France.

"Go to France?" said his master, surprised that the apparently contented and happy youth had thus suddenly become dissatisfied with his situation; "for what?"

"Ask Mr. Gallaudet to tea to-morrow evening," continued George, "and I will explain."

His kind friend was invited accordingly. At tea when the apprentice presented himself, with his manuscripts—in English and French—and explained his sings or intention to go to France.

"In the time of Napoleon," said he, "a prize was offered by the French government for the greatest rule of measuring plane surfaces. [illegible] never been awarded, and that method has yet to be discovered."

He then demonstrated his problem, to the surprise and gratification of his friends, who immediately furnished him with the means of defraying his expenses, and with letters of introduction to the Hon. Lewis Cass, then our Minister to the Court of France.

He was introduced to Louis Phillipe, and in the presence of the king, and nobles, and plenipotentiaries, the American youth demonstrated his problem, and received the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, which he had clearly won, besides several presents from the king.

He then took letters of introduction, and proceeded to the Court of St. James, and took up a similar prize, offered by the Royal Society, and returned to the United States. Here he was preparing to secure the benefits of his discovery by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose ministers had witnessed his demonstrations at London, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian Court, and furnishing him with ample means for his outfit.

He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburg, and is now a Professor of Mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the Autocrat of all the Russias.

THE PARSEE—THE JEW—AND THE CHRISTIAN.

A Jew entered a Parsee temple, and beheld the sacred fire. What? said he to the priest, do ye worship the fire? Not the fire, answered the priest; it is to us an emblem of the sun and of his genial heat. Do ye then worship the sun as your god? asked the Jew. Know ye not this luminary also is but the work of that Almighty Creator?

We know it, replied the priest; but the uncultivated man requires a sensible sign in order to form a conception of the Most High. And is not the sun, the incomprehensible source of light, an image of that invisible Being who blesses and preserves all things?

The Israelite thereupon rejoined. Do your people, then, distinguish the type from the original? They call the sun their god; and descending from this to a baser object, they kneel before an earthly flame! Ye amuse the outward, but blind the inward eye; and while ye hold to them the earthly withdraw the heavenly light! Thou shalt not make unto thee any image or any likeness.

How, then, do ye designate the Supreme Being? asked the Parsee.

We call him Jehovah Adonai, that is the Lord who is, who was, and who will be, answered the Jew.

Your appelation is grand and sublime, said the Parsee; but it is awful too

A Christian then drew nigh and said, we call him Father.

The Pagan and the Jew looked at each other, and said, Here is at once an image and reality. It is a word of the heart, said they.

Therefore they raised their eyes to heaven, and said, with reverence and love, "Our Father!" And they took each other by the hand, and all three called one another brother!—Dr. F. A. Krummacher.

THE GOSPEL MINISTRY AND THE TIMES.

What is the character of the preaching by which the Church is sought to be edified now? Is the ministry what it ought to be? Has it lost none of the power once belonging to it. It cannot be denied that there has been a great change effected in the method and style of preaching common now-a-days from that of the Apostles, of the Reformers, and of the sires of the English Puritans and Covenanters of Scotland, when the preacher commanded an influence before which kings and rulers quailed, and which moved angels, mingling them at pleasure. In our day the power of the pulpit has to a very great extent been sacrificed to popularity. The preacher of the present day may wield a keener blade than the men of former times did, but it is evident to the most unobservant of observers, that he does not cut as deep with it. He may be a good accomplished swordsman, nevertheless it is true that he does not do the same amount of execution which his earlier prototype did. He may glitter and shine more than these mighty thinkers of their time had the power to do, but while they made their audience cry out and pray, the modern preacher-hearer only admires and praises him.

By the power of the pulpit I do not mean its attractiveness. To have a congregation amused, entertained, &c., and returning again and again to be put through the same process, is not preaching the Gospel, and yet it is true such forms the greater part of the preaching of the Dress and Show and Sabbath-breaking reign supreme, and when we look at the daily walk of professed Christians one would imagine that the chief end of man's existence was frivolity. It may be affirmed that there are more Churches at this day filled Sabbath after Sabbath in America and England than there ever has been at any one period before, and yet it is believed that the pulpit is losing its power more and more. Is there a Luther alive upon the earth to-day? Has Calvin's mantle fallen on the shoulders of any one, and does any of our modern preachers command the power which John Owen, or William Romaine, or John Bunyan or a Toplady wielded? One who knew well what he said has employed the following language in reference to the pulpit and its occupants: "As things stand at present our Creeds and Confessions are become effete, and the Bible a dead letter, and many of the ministers of the popular sects of the day are more bent on the pursuit of dollars and popularity than on saving souls."

Christianity is indulging in fashions, and falling away to the spirit of the world.—[illegible] and entertainment seeking [illegible] among places, in the theatre, and among the mazes of the seductive dance. You may find Christians among the foremost and the most frivolous, and what are many of the popular and decorated churches of the day but one large emporium of the fashions of the day.

And the sermons you hear! They are like the pleasant sounds of one who can play well on an instrument. Once McCree and Chalmers thundered in Edinburgh and Munro and McLeod in New York. But what are preachers doing now? If they were doing their duty now as it ought to be done, would not a more successful onset be made on the evils of the day which threaten to carry away all virtue and religion out of the land.

MENTOR.

Smith, August 17, 1861.

THE EXHIBITION OF 1862.

The brick walls are now more than 30 feet high; the floor of the picture gallery is being laid, and the skeleton of the eastern end of the great structure is now mapping out in piles of brown columns, with some interlacings of trellis and free girders, the number and extent of which visibly grow with every hour's labor. Before August much of the second story will be completed, and even the massive arches which span the nave will be turned across and in their places. The immensely increased rapidity with which iron structures of the most enduring kind can be run up as compared with those of brick or stone is shown by the way in which the metal portions of the building have progressed over the picture gallery. The latter part of the structure, though begun long before the rest, is only about 30 feet high, while in some parts the iron work is upwards of fifty feet. The works connected with the picture gallery are however, of no ordinary magnitude and substance, for all connected with this portion of the building is most massive, as may be imagined from the fact that these walls have already consumed over 6,000,000 bricks, and will require nearly 12,000,000 more to complete them. Upwards of two miles of little tramways intersect the ground in all directions, and along these as people of men can move a truck with four or five tons of girders at a far greater speed than six or eight horses could move them in a waggon. With the same view a small powerful steam engine is placed in the centre of the works, and connected by a network of ropes passing through pulleys over all parts of the ground. By means of these loads are drawn about the tramways, or columns and girders hoisted and lowered in their places, with amazing rapidity and ease.—But the most astonishing of these labor-saving contrivances is a gigantic travelling scaffold, which has been built on twelve wheels, to run up and down the whole length of the navel. This huge structure is 60 feet square and 100 feet high, and weighs nearly three hundred tons. Not four men with levers can move it almost quickly to any part of the works. It will be used in hoisting the upper columns, the huge circular wrought-iron ribs of the roof for painting, or, indeed, for any purpose connected with the building whose many uses have to be employed at a great height. Messrs. Kelk and Lucas are confident that they will [illegible] to enable the building [illegible] to the 1st May, 1862.

BRITAIN AND HER COLONIES.

LAND AND SEA DEFENCEBOOKS.

(From the London Times.)

In family life there is nothing more wretched than the state of things which arises from the desire of ill-judging parents to keep their children in leading strings too long. When a fussy old father is always questioning and reprimanding his great, grown up, bearded son, or a mother will persist in thinking her buxom daughters fit only for the school-room, we may apprehend, if not an actual domestic revolt, at least a chronic irritability and unfitness which is ill concealed from the eyes of strangers.—Such a family was formed by the British Empire as it existed but a few years ago. Canada, the Cape, Jamaica, Australia, did not revolt, because, with all the pedantry and obstinacy of the Home Government, they suffered no grievous wrong; just as we may fancy the foolish parents to be in the main kind, and even weakly indulgent to their children. But there was a constant interchange of invitations on the one part and of reproofs on the other, and at last our colonists in every part of the world came to believe that they were a very ill treated race, sacrificed to the caprices of English Ministers and the interests of their office-seeking subordinates.

These times were full of burdens to the English tax-payer, who expiated the folly of his rulers after the usual manner. The old traditions of colonization had, in fact, never been abandoned, and the mother country purchased at an exorbitant price the useless supremacy on which the old-fashioned statesmen set a value. When the colonial system was established, and thenceforward down to our own time, the o was a dogma which no one would have thought of questioning.—It was that the value of Colonies consisted in the exclusive right of trading with them, and that the protection in war, and tutelage in peace, afforded by the mother country, ought to be repaid by dutiful colonists importing their goods for English markets and in English bottoms. The lengths to which Spain and Great Britain carried this doctrine are scarcely credible. The well-known fact that the manufacture of some of the commonest articles—for instance, as hats—was a felony in one of our American Colonies, shows that the prerogatives were asserted by metropolitan governments and acceded to for a time even by high spirited settlers. On the other hand, the sacrifices made by the mother country were large and frequent. England was ever ready to plunge into a war to defend "the Plantations" from the slightest injury. The burden of the war fell on the mother country; it was her soldiers who bled, her treasure that was expended, and, when peace had been conquered or yielded, or in some way brought about the gains were frequently given to the child, while the losses fell on the proud and happy, but exhausted parent. This, at least, was the case with England, which lost 13 American Colonies by attempting to make them partially reimburse her for a war carried on to save them from the grandest and most daring scheme of French ambition.

It need not be said what was the end of these doctrines. They were opposed to the first principles of human intercourse, and were destined almost to destroy colonization altogether. The desire of self-government and the desire of free trade was continually exciting the colonies to rebel against the claims of the mother country, or rather, of the middle-some politicians who successively ruled at the Colonial office. At last, after Great Britain, and Spain and Portugal had lost the chief of their possessions, the true principles of colonial government came to be understood. A colony is not a longer a community which buys the liberty of living unarmed, untaxed, without public debt, and submitting to commercial restrictions which diminish its prosperity, in order that it may be a valuable appendage to an opulent and powerful State. It is an offshoot of the mother country, which has grown to its population, and its people have the same rights of self-government and free trade which are possessed by any sovereign State. For a number of years England has received, and desired to receive, no other trading advantages from her Colonies than those which are possessed by other nations. Naturally, men of our own race and habits any institutions will be brought into a larger intercourse with us than with foreign nations, and commerce chiefly the artiel which we manufacture. But this advanta over our neighbors is the only one which we expect in our dealings with the colonial populations. Thus the Colonies have every possible liberty that the heart of the patriot can desire, as agitator in search of a grievance must hunt among local subjects, and not expect to make capital out of the misdeeds of the mother country. But on our side things are not so clear. The colonial system has been abrogated for the Colonies, but not for England herself. The old feeling of dependence on one side, and the old belief in the duty of military protection on the other, are giving way but slowly, and the consequence is that while the English merchant has not a single advantage in his dealings with a colony, the English taxpayer is expected to furnish the colonists with army, navy, market service, a great part of their government, and a little of their religion.—We have had more than one complaint of the selfishness of some colonists, who, while refusing to the country privileges which were formerly [illegible] rights, have been immensely demanding grants and concessions, as if the British Treasury were an inexhaustible fund entirely at their service.

It has been reserved for the latest and richest of the British Colonies to set the example of good sense and manly self-dependence. The letter from our Melbourne correspondent, which we published on Wednesday, shows what prosperity and national spirit have been attained on [illegible] distant island-continent, which, previously to the discovery of gold, was [illegible] as a place of arms and the discovery [illegible] Colonial Office a field in which to gratify their wildest caprices. We are now told that even the part of the military expenditure defrayed by the Australians is an injustice to them. Not that they decline to pay for, they pay willingly, but because the troops are actually in New Zealand. They are not in Victoria at all, nor are they wanted there. "Let England," says the Victorians, "defend the floating property of her merchants by her navy, and leave Victoria to settle matters with any enemy who may land." The naval part of protection belongs to the Home Government; but, "as to our internal defence, that is our affair. In a few years the part of Melbourne will be well fortified, and we have, and are likely to have a large body of men trained to arms. Our effective Volunteers exceed 4,000. We have 1,200 well trained police; and, as the personnel of this force changes continually, in a few years we shall probably have some 12,000 or 15,000 men in the country capable of constituting a disciplined army on the shortest notice. The Defence Commission, consisting of naval and military officers of more or less experience, has reported the force at our disposal to be sufficient to repel a hostile landing; and the contemplated harbor defences are designed to defeat anything of the kind." This is the language which it becomes a great and free community to utter. Though we quite agree that when we go to war for Imperial purposes it is our duty to exert ourselves to preserve the Colonies from injury, yet it seems reasonable that our part should be confined to protecting their coasts by sea, and that they should have the duty, as they certainly have the power, to repel any invader who should chance to effect a landing. The strength of a great Colony like that of Victoria, whose capital with its suburbs number some one hundred thousand souls, is such that it can with ease defeat any attacks of an enemy by the establishment of such Volunteer corps as have proved so successful in England.

It is most satisfactory to find the Colonies doing just what the Committee on Colonial Military Expenditure advises that they should be invited to do. Australia is no distant from any enemy that a very small body of Volunteers will be sufficient to keep at bay such an invading force as could be collected in those remote seats. But Canada is exposed to greater dangers both from French remembrances and American anticipations. To the increase of the Volunteer force in British America the efforts of the authorities should be directed, and there is no reason to doubt that such a Militia might soon be organized as would relieve this country from the burden of keeping up many costly garrisons.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SEA.

Our readers may have observed recently among our maritime extracts the copy of the contents of a slip of paper found in a bottle some weeks ago on the western coast of Uist, in the Hebrides, and forwarded to us by our agent at Stornoway.—The paper in question, apparently the leaf of a pocket-book, used in the hurry of the moment, was covered on both sides with pencil marks, from which the following was with difficulty deciphered:—"On board the Pacific, from L'pool to N. York. Ship going down. (Great) confusion on board. Icebergs around us on every side. I know I cannot escape. I write the cause of our loss that friends may not live in suspense. The finder of this will please get it published.—Wm. Graham." If we are right in our conjecture, the ship here named is the Pacific, one of the Collins line of steamers which vessel left Liverpool on January 23, 1856, three days before the Persia, and has not since been heard of; and this slip of paper, three inches by two, is probably the only record of the fate of that missing ship. We have not come to this conclusion hastily. On receiving the frail record from Stornoway we at once published it, as the best and most expeditious mode of placing it before those who might possibly be interested in the fate of the vessel named. The Pacific is by no means an uncommon appellation, more especially among the shipping of the United States, and we did not despair that some light would be thrown upon the "message from the sea," which had so singularly been preserved and placed in our hand. After waiting for some time we received a communication from Messrs. Zerega, of New York, stating that their ship Pacific being in port at the time, of course the record had no reference thereto, but they much feared it might, notwithstanding the difference in the names, apply to their ship Baltic, which had left Liverpool in January last, and has not since been heard of, and we are requested at the same time to communicate with Messrs. Zerega's agents in Liverpool. This we have been careful to do, and at the same time we directed a search to be made among the lists of passengers and crews, both of the Baltic and of the Pacific of the Collins line. We have ascertained that no person named [illegible] on board the Baltic when that vessel left Liverpool on her voyage to N.Y. but it appears that a man of that name did ship as boilerman in the Pacific in January, [illegible] the day of paper is signed "Wm. Graham." This however is a discrepancy which will not count for much with those who are acquainted with the careless way in which sea-faring people frequently give their names, and the facility for such a mistake presented by the ordinary mode of entering the name of a ship's company. From the facts elicited so far we come to the conclusion that the vessel was lost, and to which the frail memorandum before us refers, was a ship named the Pacific. The writer was evidently some person accustomed to the perils of the sea, for it is difficult to understand how any person whose nerves had not been hardened by the presence of frequent and appalling dangers could have written with such manifest coolness in the immediate presence of death.—This self-possession at once negatives the idea that the person who could exhibit it in a moment of such extreme peril could possibly have mistaken the name of the vessel whose loss he has recorded. Then, again, we find from the records of the lost Pacific that a person named Graham sailed in her from Liverpool on her ill-fated voyage, and, in all human probability, was on board at the time she was lost with all hands. This is the strongest point in the entire chain of evidence, for it connects the writer of the memorandum directly with the lost ship, and the ship with the writer. Lastly, since the memorandum has been given to the world—now nearly weeks—we have had no intimation that any ship named the Pacific sailing from Liverpool recently has been lost, or is even missing. The ship in question must have left the port so long ago that all hopes of her recovery has been abandoned. Some interest might possibly, even at this distance of time, have been felt in the fate of the Pacific, but the company to which they formerly belonged no longer exists. The remaining ships of the Collins' line have some time been disposed of, and are employed, we believe, or were recently employed, on the line from New York to Panama. To sum up, we have the [illegible] that the writer of the [illegible] was [illegible] the ship of [illegible] a bottle on the shore of the Hebrides shipped on steamers in the Pacific, in January, 1856, and the presumption is in every way strong against his having mistaken the name of the ship in which he sailed, and was apparently lost. We also know that the Persia, which sailed three days after the Pacific, narrowly escaped destruction from icebergs on her passage out. The announcement of the finding of the memorandum and its contents has been now some weeks in our columns, but, with the exception of the communication already referred to, it has produced no response, which is utterly unaccountable, except on the supposition that no such vessel as the Pacific ever has been lost, or that she belonged to parties who have ceased to have any interest in her fate. The first hypothesis is contrary to the fact; the second is quite reconcilable with the fact that the vessel referred to in the memorandum is the steamer Pacific, of the late Collins' line, and no other. We leave the extraordinary voyage of the bottle which contained Graham's memorandum to the consideration of all those who, like Capt. Maury and others, have made the phenomena of winds and currents in the ocean their peculiar study. When the bottle was thrown overboard from the Pacific, that vessel was surrounded by mountains of ice. This tiny receptacle of the only record of a magnificent ship engulfed the crash which obliterated all trace of the vessel from which it was thrown, was carried in all probability thousands of miles on the ice, and was only released when the ice melted in the tropical sea. Hence—the presumption is not a violent one—this fragile messenger was carried by the Gulf Stream, and carried along the course nearly to the extreme verge to which, as we are told, the Gulf stream is propagated. The bottle was found on the western shore of the Hebrides, where it arrived under the mysterious guidance of those influences which have of late years so earnestly engrossed the attention of scientific geographers. —Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

What good reason can be assigned for the enormous proportion of lawyers in Parliament? Why should Montreal, for instance, have lawyers for all her three members? Why should the Administration be exclusively composed of lawyers? Do lawyers constitute the great majority of the population, that they thus secure the whole administration of public affairs? Or are they the most intelligent, honest, and patriotic class in the community, that all others are desirous of leaving everything in their hands? Barely to state these questions is to answer them. Lawyers constitute a very small proportion of the whole people; and without going into the common and coarse proverbial expressions concerning their profession, it may fairly be said that no class of the community commands less confidence for disinterestedness and high moral purpose. We speak not of many individuals who stand as high in public estimation for integrity as for professional ability; but we speak of the general character of the profession, and of the average of those who go into Parliament. Loud-mouthed professors are many of them, whose promises no man believes,—self-seeking, trading politicians, who go into Parliament for the advantage they may personally derive from their position,—shallow statesmen, whose judgment in public matters no one would ask or care for. Why is it that such men should constitute the staple, not only of our Legislators, but of our Cabinet Ministers? Surely this is a question of no little moment to the public politic.

The first reason we should suggest for this result, is, that lawyers seek to get into Parliament far more frequently and persistently than any other class, or, perhaps, all other classes put together. They find such an interruption of their ordinary business less injurious, and such an addition of respectability and importance as the title of Member of Parliament gives, more advantageous than do men in other callings.

The second reason is, that lawyers have necessarily studied laws, and know more of their construction, interpretation and bearings than other classes of the community, and are, in this respect, really more fit for legislators. Just as farmers would be consulted about questions of agriculture, and merchants about questions of making and administering laws. This necessity, however, has reference more to the manner than the matter of legislation, and can, to a large extent, be met by having good law clerks for the Legislature, as is the case at present.

The third and great reason is, that lawyers can speak in public, whilst other classes of the community cannot. It is utterly vain to think that constituencies will give their votes to candidates, however honest and worthy, who cannot put two sentences decently together; who, whatever may be in them, cannot bring it out. The man who can state his views and purposes distinctly and convincingly, will have incalculably the advantage of another of equal ability and attainments who cannot. Nay, a very inferior man who can show off all that he knows, and perhaps somewhat more, will have the advantage of one greatly his superior, who is tongue-tied for lack of practice in public speaking. There is only one other class, besides lawyers in the community who are trained to public speaking, and who if they were equally willing, and if it were generally considered equally proper for them to become candidates, would we have no doubt soon clear Parliament of its undue proportion of lawyers. We mean, of course, ministers of religion. Any one who has compared the relative effectiveness and popularity of ministers and lawyers at public meetings, where both were alike called upon to speak for the public good, will have no difficulty in deciding which class would be most likely to carry the constituencies.—But ministers being shut out by law and public opinion, as well as by the nature of their calling, from this way of serving the people, lawyers have the whole field of politics to themselves, and will continue to have it, very much to the public detriment, till our schools and colleges teach public speaking to all classes of the community; and until young men of other callings shall seek suitable opportunities of training themselves to public speaking. It has been a fond hope with us, that the training which religious young men receive in Sabbath Schools, Bands of Hope, Temperance Societies, and Prayer Meetings, for public speaking, would enable them naturally to take their places in after-life as the legislators of the country; but most of them are extremely backward in improving those golden opportunities. Ministers could do much, very much, to encourage and bring them forward. Will they not do so, for many reasons, one among which is: to rescue our country from what John Knox would have called the "monstrous regiment," (or Government) of lawyers. We wish to see public business in the hand of religious men, but this can only be if religious men are more competent to transact it than others.—Witness.

AMERICAN FONDNESS FOR RELICS.

There is a crowd around a window in which is displayed a secession officer's cap, and on it is all stained with blood, the exhibitor is justified in saying, as he does, that the owner was killed. This is a "relic;" there is a great feeling for relics in the states. The tree under which Brigadier General Slable shot a gentleman in Washington has been denuded of the bark for 10 or 20 feet above the ground to furnish relics of the remarkable event. I incurred the resentment and provoked the indignation of a friend by my indifference to relics at Charleston. He carried into my room, as a precious trophy of the "battle of Sumpter," a fragment of shell, and unwittingly left it on my chimney piece. Dogs assembled beneath my window at night; differences of opinion arose among them—noises making night hideous and sleep impossible. I arose in my wrath, and no other missile being available, the Sumpterian fragment was hurled forth; and I did what it and some of its fellows had yet accomplished—hit something, to wit a dog, and dispersed the assemblage. "Where is my bit of shell?" I did not know I was such a monster till I saw my conduct plainly depicted in the ingenuous face of friendship, on its owner ascertaining that his shell had gone out of the window and could not be found on the pavement.—Dr. Russell.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We beg to remind our subscribers that many of them are in arrears for their subscriptions; many for one year, not a few for two years, while nearly all have entered on a third year with us, which according to our terms should be paid in advance. These sums though small separately amount collectively to a very large sum, and it is of the greatest importance to us that we be paid up punctually. The cost of publishing a newspaper is no trifle, and there are engagements to be met daily;—it is impossible, therefore, for a publisher to give his journal that attention and care it should have, if his mind is daily harrassed by embarrassments and difficulties. The credit system is a clog to the wheels of any enterprise, that often cannot be averted, but where the sums are so small as in our case there is no excuse to our debtors. We hope our friends will lose no time in settling with us, by calling at our office or remitting by mail.

Subscribers whose subscriptions expired on the 20th instant, will be allowed to 20th September to renew the same at our advance rates; after that date $2 will be charged in every case. Parties two years in arrears by remitting $5 before the 20th of September, will be credited to August 20th, 1862.

THE POST MASTER GENERAL IN PETERBOROUGH.

Last Saturday our good Town was all astir from the announcement that the Hon. Sidney Smith had arrived from Cobourg for the express purpose of preparing for a candidature of the Trent Division, in the place of our late Representative, the Hon. Edmund Murney, deceased. In due time copies of the Postmaster's address were scattered about Town, and his friends and supporters were flying to and fro, hailing every one they considered available, recommending the hon. gentleman, and soliciting their votes and influence. We observed some leading men from both Port Hope and Cobourg who seemed similarly employed. On Monday bills were posted through the Town notifying the Public where the Postmaster General's Committee Rooms were, and others stating that the Hon. gentleman would address the electors in the Town Hall on that evening. At 8 o'clock the Town Hall was well filled, and after the Mayor was called to the chair Mr. Smith commenced his address by reading a flysheet signed "An Elector?" issued that day, and which will be found in another column, warning the electors not to promise their support to Mr. Smith, as there would be an Opposition candidate in the field soon, &c. After getting through reading he asked if the writer was present, as he wished him to come forward and discuss the charges therein made.

After expressing his indignation at the assassin-like attack thus made upon him, and expressing his readiness at any time or in any way to meet the writer of the offensive missive he proceeded to lay before the audience the course he had pursued while in Parliament, especially while a member of the Government, and justified—or attempted to justify—every act he and they have done from the "Double Shuffle" downward. He said he had redeemed every pledge he had ever given to his constituents, as the journals of the House would testify to the votes therein recorded, and although he had done so, those very men had rejected him by a "contemptible minority of 27." He then went somewhat minutely into the affairs in his own department, showing what he had effected in the short time he held office, especially in raising the Post Office from being a burden on the finances of the Province to become not only self-sustaining but actually having a balance on hand. He showed no symptoms of being affected with any thing like meek modesty. His continued use of the first person, and self laudation were sufficient proofs of his not wanting in nerve to carry out what he wished, and so delighted did he seem of the portrait he had drawn of himself that he said he was satisfied his auditors must think with him that if he, who had been represented as the worst, had done so much good to the country, the government could not be such a bad lot of fellows after all.

He then went on with the "double shuffle," and read from the act to show that what they did therein was all right, and concluded by stating that they were exonerated by the highest legal tribunals of the country. It was a miserable attempt, however, to get out of an ugly affair. He had better had left it alone. The Resteries were referred to casually, and the Public Debt was noticed as not being so large as the Opposition represented, by some fourteen millions of dollars, and the opportunity was used to have a fling at the troublesome "parish." Then came an allusion to the subject of University Reform, and we feared two or three times that he would stick fast. It was plain to those who knew the position of the matter in connection with the University, that whatever Mr. Smith may know about, he knows very little about this subject. His remarks showed he was not at home, and he seemed glad when he got to the end.

Now, what will our readers think when we assure them that in Mr. Smith's address to the electors of Trent Division the portion on University Reform is almost a verbatim copy of what the Hon. John A. Macdonald said to the electors of Kingston but a little more than two months ago. Nay, further, a large portion of the Hon. Mr. Smith's address is copied from Mr. Macdonald's Address referred to above. Such a barefaced piece of plagiarism is, we venture to say, without a parallel in recent electioneering history. To say that a prominent member of the Administration, one who has been at Foreign Courts connected with the objects of his Department,—a gentleman having a respectable professional reputation before he entered Parliament, should come before a constituency embracing a large population, with a borrowed address, is really too bad. In fact it is nothing short of an insult to attempt thus to impose upon an intelligent community.—Great anxiety is felt both by Mr. Smith and his friends that he be returned for this Division, and no effort will be spared on their part to secure this. The more necessity that extraordinary pains should be used in starting well. Had the hon. gentleman to pass the ordeal of glorious old Peterboro' only it were easy to predict his utter failure; there being two other Counties we cannot speak with certainty what they may do. Many of our readers are aware that Mr. Billa Flint of Belleville is to contest the Division, and as he comes out on the Opposition ticket we counsel our friends to be in no hurry to pledge themselves till they see Mr. Flint's address.

And we beg to remind the electors that the Contest now commencing in the Trent Division is one of no ordinary interest. It will be looked upon as one of the most important ones yet held, as it will test fairly the respective strength of the Ministry and Opposition in a very important section of the country. It is viewed by the ministerialists in this light.

Mr. Smith told us, on Monday night last, of the letters and telegrams he had received, approving of his course and expressing the senders' good will. On Tuesday we learned quite a number of strangers interested in Mr. Smith's election were in Town, among whom were the famous names of Ogle R. Gowan, and Dr. Lett, of Toronto. Let unanimity and zeal animate our ranks, and we will, we hope, have the pleasure to chronicle the successful return of a man bound to oppose the men who have too long misruled us.

SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT.

We are happy to notice the commencement of a number of new buildings, in the business part of the Town. Everywhere workmen are busy excavating and building, and we will be disappointed if the loss by the late fire is not more than made up by the number of new buildings which will be erected before winter sets in.

THEATRE.—A talented troupe are performing in the Town Hall to crowded houses. On Tuesday night the play of "The Stranger" was performed. The acting of Emma Cushman was admirable; and in the after piece of "Family Jars," Mr. Forrest took us down by storm with his droll [illegible] "Lady of Lyons" will be performed, to be followed by the farce of the "Illustrious Stranger."

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Council met on Monday night.

Several communications were read and received.

A report from the Committee on Streets and Bridges, recommending the appropriations for the year, was received.

A report from the Committee on Appointments to Office recommending the appointment of two special Constables, as night-watch, was read and received.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Menzies,—That the Mayor be authorized and he is hereby required to prepare, fill up, and execute debentures to the amount of $3,500 immediately, under the Act of Consolidation, and hand the same over to the Commissioners of the Town Trust for negotiation, and the Mayor is also requested to have advertisements inserted in the local newspapers that the said amount of debentures are now ready and for sale. The amounts of each debenture, and the coupons also, now to be issued, to be made payable at the office of the Commercial Bank of Canada here.—Carried.

It was agreed by motion that a temporary side-walk be laid on the east side of George Street, from the store of Mr. John Thomson to that of A. W. Kempt, until the buildings on that side of the street are erected.

The new Market By-law was read a second time in Committee of the Whole, afterwards a third time and passed. [We will publish this new By-law on our fourth page next week.]

ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Committee of Management of the St. Andrew's Society, for the County of Peterborough, held in the Committee Room on the evening of the 7th August the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Moved by Mr. Lewis Glover, seconded by Mr. William Arnett, and

Resolved,—That Messrs. D. Sutherland, John Thomson and C. Cameron be appointed a Committee to draw up and present an Address of sympathy in her bereavement to the widow of our late Worthy President, A. Sawers, Esq., and that the same be published in the local newspapers.

The following is the Address:

To Mrs. Sawers,—Madam,—We the members of the St. Andrew's Society of the town and county of Peterborough, beg most respectfully to tender you in the period of your grief, our heartfelt sympathy in the afflictive bereavement which the Allwise Disposer of Events in His inscrutable wisdom has seen fit to visit upon you and us, we refer to the death of your late esteemed husband, and our late native and worthy President. We have, while enjoying the benefit of his intercourse with us, felt honored by having as efficient and dignified a gentleman to be our chief officer,—one who took so lively an interest in all that related to the prosperity of the Institution over which he presided,—who lent an attentive ear to the tale of woe or distress, and who was ever ready to relieve with his means the necessitous and unfortunate. We feel deeply our loss, and we desire to record our sense of the high esteem in which we held him while he presided over us, and we should ill repay the kind services he so generously rendered us did we not express our appreciation of those services, as well as offer to his relict our sincere condolence. We, therefore, madam, beg of you to accept our expressions of sympathy in your bereaved situation, and sincerely hope and pray that an All-wise Providence will guide and direct you and your family in your present trying circumstances.

(Signed in behalf of the Committee.)

D. Sutherland,
John Thomson,
Charles Cameron.

THEATRE—NEW ATTRACTION.

Mr. Editor:—We have a theatre company in Town now, and if the Manager will not feel insulted I will bring to his notice that this is a favorable time to bring before the Peterboro people the farce in 2 (outrageous) Acts, of the "Double Shuffle." He need fear no lack of assistance to his talented troupe. The experienced artist, Sig. Schmidt from the Quebec Theatre, may be engaged "for a few nights only" to play the leading character, and there is a goodly number of office-holders, office-seekers and office-expectants to play sup's. and lacqueys. Most of them are old hands and will play their parts to perfection. An appropriate after-piece would be the popular comedy of "As you like it," or "Now you see it, and now you don't." A "new species of humbugging," approprios to the mysterious disappearance of public treasure, will be exhibited in fine style by the celebrated juggler Sig. Schmidt, assisted by the renowned Galt and Macdonald. Of course if the Theatre man thinks my suggestion a good one he will at once adopt it, and he will be sure of crowded houses every night.

INGOMAR.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

A GOOD WATER SUPPLY.

SIR,—Observing in your last issue a reference to the inefficient supply of water in Town in cases of fire, I attach hereto a plan whereby the deficiency would be supplied.

My plan is simply the erection of a tower of wood at least sixty feet in height, as near as convenient to the water above Dixon's dam. On the top of this Tower would have to be placed a Tank constructed of boiler plate, and capable of containing about 18,000 gallons of water. This tank would have to be filled by a steam-engine working a double-action force pump. Access would have to be provided to the top of the Tank by a stair-case occupying the centre of the tower and passing through the centre of the Tank. From the tower the water would have to be led by a 6 or 9 inch main along Water Street, with 4 or 6 inch branches along Charlotte st. and the other Streets running parallel with it; then with hydrants placed at all the angles of blocks or wherever else required, together with a sufficient supply of hose no fire need spread beyond the spot it originates. The cost of the plan which I have here delineated would, for a 6 inch main, not exceed $17,000; if a 9 inch main with 6 branches the cost would not exceed $25,000.

I need not say that the greater the height of the tower the greater will be the efficiency of the water-supply when required for service.

Yours, &c., B. T. Brookes.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Having noticed in the Report of last week's Court of Thanks from the Postmaster to "my friends" for services rendered during the late fire, I wish to call your attention to the fact, that it was entirely through the foresight and exertions of Mr. Wrighton that the mails, money, &c in the Post Office were saved. The matter stands thus: Mr. W. seeing the danger of the Office being destroyed, locked the doors and by himself removed mails and valuables to the Bank of Montreal, and then packed all papers into boxes, and afterwards with the assistance of six others (who repudiate Mr. Carver's thanks) removed them to a place of safety. Meanwhile Mr. W.'s clothes, money, &c., were either burned or stolen over head. In Mr. W. even included in the Card of Thanks? so, "my friends" get all the credit, and the real worker is publicly snubbed.

Had Mr. Wrighton allowed "my friends" to enter before everything had been packed! where would have been the money letters, &c? Echo answers, where?

A short notice of this in your paper would perhaps prove the means of substantial justice being meeted out to the deserving party, and at the same time oblige,

Your obed't servant,
A Visitor.

Peterboro, Aug. 21st, 1861.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBORO',—TRENT DIVISION.

GENTLEMEN:

It is but a few days ago that you concluded a victory in the return of Colonel Haultain as member for this county. You have reason to be proud of such a conquest in the cause of Reform, and few will cease to remember the noble display of loyalty and enthusiasm which crowned the result on the day of declaration, such a sight on such an occasion had never before been seen in the good town of Peterboro.

It had not been contemplated that the electors would be called upon to exercise the trust committed to their hands for several years, but death, that leveller of all ranks, has fallen upon the Hon. E. Murney, Member of the Legislative Council, with three years of his term uncompleted.

This event then, calls upon you to gird yourselves for another contest on the same principles, and it also calls upon the gentleman you so recently elected, to come forward and aid you by every means in his power to sustain the reform cause which alone placed him in his present position.

Hitherto the election of a member to the Upper House for the Trent Division—which includes the county of Peterboro, the North Riding of Hastings, and the small county of Leonox—has not been of much importance, or any real benefit to this section of the country. The first contest was between Mr. Short, late county member, and Mr. Murney, deceased, and though it took place five years ago it is in the recollection of many that the contest was a keen one, and that Mr. Short, the reform candidate, would most certainly have been returned but for one of those paltry tricks resorted to on all possible occasions by the present men in power.

It may be remembered the polling days were so arranged that a Sunday intervened, and it was also convenient to find a holiday as a reason for further delay. This interregnum allowed the beaten forces to rally and organize for fresh exertions; money was freely expended and Mr. Short was beaten by a small majority taken from the eastern part of the division. In this county Mr. Short was entirely successful, his majority being over 1,000.

What the county of Peterboro has done so often and so recently, under most extraordinary circumstances, it can easily do again, and I think will do earnestly and efficiently.

As the county of Peterboro is situated at present, with a heavier vote in the eastern sections than she can overcome, it would not be advisable to risk a candidate from this county, and in doing this we forgo any benefit likely to arise from the election of a candidate for the Division.

In this view of the case the proper course is to invite the lower sections of the Division to fix upon a fitting and popular candidate sure to carry a large and heavy vote there as a Reformer, and add to it here to the greatest extent possible in the same course.

This plan would seem to ensure success to the Reform cause, but should other tactics be pursued by the Ministerial candidate it may be necessary to make changes, and be prepared for such emergencies should they arise.

As matters stand at present the only candidate in the field is Hon. Sidney Smith, the defeated of Northumberland, who has issued an address, and called, and addressed a public meeting in the Town Hall Peterboro, consisting of all office holders and supporters of the government and our French masters.

Mr. Smith and his friends were left in quiet possession of the meeting, and said and did just what they thought proper, without let or hindrance. The Hon. gentleman thought the proceedings so tame that he actually longed for and sought the appearance of an opposition at that he might have something to vary the scene and contend with, in this however he was disappointed for he heard no other sound than that of his own voice.

I have not Mr. Smith's address to the electors in my possession otherwise it would be referred to, and a short criticism on its contents be offered for your consideration. I have however read the document, and it struck me as a piece of special pleading worthy of the school and masters Mr. Smith serves, and whom he dare not disobey. In every particular it is non-committal, and gives no indication of following any policy other than that of Mr. McDonald and Mr. Cartier. It does not promise in unmistakable terms, that Mr. Smith will remain in no government, that without authority first obtained from Parliament, will pay away millions of the people's money. It does not promise, in terms that can be relied on, that Mr. Smith will make justice to Upper Canada a cabinet question, or leave that cabinet if it is not. It does not promise that Mr. Smith will resent the insult of Mr Cartier, that the people of Western Canada are immoral as compared with Lower Canada, and that the excess of three hundred thousand population in Canada West is of no more importance than three hundred thousand cod-fish in Gaspe Bay. It does not promise that the connexion between the Grand Trunk and the government shall cease for ever, that no more millions shall be paid to it without the consent of Parliament, and that it shall be cut adrift to look after its own business and its own affairs. It does not promise that the public debt shall no further be increased, and that the expenditure shall not exceed the revenue, but that one shall be cut down so as to correspond with the other. Mr. Smith's address does not state the truth when it puts down the public debt at $58,000,000, he leaves out of the account several important items for which the country is liable, among others all the special accounts, many of which were one of the most [illegible] principles of the whole administration. He went into Parliament pledged to support Representation by Population, and pledged to oppose any ministry which would not grant to Upper Canada this simple act of justice; and yet he became and he continued one of the most devoted members of a government opposed to this principle, a government upheld by Lower Canada voters, and ruling for the benefit of Lower Canada alone. A government whose greatest boast was, that Representation by Population never should be granted. A government too, which has added some FORTY MILLIONS to the public debt, and which there is every reason to believe contemplates giving some seven or eight millions more to the Grand Trunk. A government which took millions of dollars out of the pockets of the people of Upper Canada to buy farms for the Frenchmen of Lower Canada. Which every year spends large sums of money without the consent of Parliament, and whose mismanagement and extravagance have been such that to meet the ordinary expenses of the year some two or three millions have to be borrowed annually to make up the deficiency of the income to meet the expenditure. And this system of borrowing has been continued all through the ministerial career of the man who now asks you to elect him, in order that he may help to continue it for four years longer.—And do not fail to remember that Mr. Smith was a member of the Government that upon its return to office after the resignation of the Brown-Dorion ministry committed the enormity usually denominated "the Double Shuffle." That violated the constitution rather than go back to their constituents. And this is the man who now asks your approval and support. For his breach of faith with them and for his unprincipled conduct whilst their representative, the electors of West Northumberland indignantly rejected Mr. Smith at the late election. And now—failing there—and failing everywhere—he comes to you as if you were less worthy than the rest of Upper Canada, and as if political [illegible] honesty with you was of an [illegible] would entrust it or matter to be represented by a man whom all others reject.

You have known the electors of the County of Peterboro for many long years. I have often with them fought many a hard battle. I have been the witness of many a personal sacrifice made to public duty. But I have never yet known them to swerve from the path of right. And I do not believe that at this day and at a time too when both duty and honor require the contrary, they—the noble and independent electors of the county of Peterboro—will be found wanting in the performance of their duty to their country.

AN ELECTOR.

Peterboro, Aug. 19, 1861.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CO. OF PEEERBORO, IN CONNECTION WITH TRENT DIVISION:

GENTLEMEN,

By the recent death of the Hon. Mr. Murney, you are called upon to elect a new representative in the Legislative Council.

One candidate for your support has already appeared, the Hon. Sidney Smith, the Postmaster General. It is not known as yet who will be the other. In the meantime, and until he is known, you should be especially careful to MAKE NO PROMISES, because by making them at a time when you are unable to judge of the relative merits of both candidates, you are virtually depriving yourselves of the privilege of deciding rightly; and you are thus shutting out from yourselves the power of faithfully discharging your duty to yourselves and to your country. I give you this caution, because, already, and even before the burial of the late member, the friends of Mr. Smith have, by means of requisitions to him, been industriously seeking to obtain your pledges in his favor, through plausible pretenses, and by taking you unawares, and before you know who is to be his opponent. It is a bad practice at any time to make premature pledges, but especially dangerous at this time. If, therefore, any of you have been induced to commit yourselves to Mr. Smith, my advice to you is at once to give notice to the person who obtained your names to his requisition that you withdrew them from it, for by this means you will be much more free to act as circumstances and your own reason may require.

This election will be one of no ordinary importance. In so far as it will be a contest between a member of the Government and one representing the Opposition, it is in fact a test of the political strength of this county in favor of the one side or the other, and is an approval or condemnation on your part of the Government. And more than all this: for you have now to decide whether you will elect as your representative a man whose own constituents have rejected him, and who so far has been unable to find favor with a County in Upper Canada. And, moreover, it is now left to you say to whether you will support and sustain the worst and most unprincipled member of a government which you have heretofore condemned—a man who will be all things to all men, to suit his own purposes, and who will not hesitate to make all the pledges which may be required of him, both to the one side and to the other, and to all religious denominations combined. To the Catholic, Separate Schools; to the Protestant, the reverse; and to the Orangeman, "No Surrender!" "Down with the Pope!" to the Methodist, University Reform; and to others, things as they are. And so on through all the catalogue of sectional and denominational requirements. And then, if by these means he can sufficiently impose upon your credulity to persuade you to give him your support, after all is over and you are no longer needed, he will snap his fingers at you and laugh at your simplicity and your ignorance.

Mr. Smith, as doubtless most of you are already aware, lately represented West Northumberland in the Lower House.—When he came before the people there he gave unbounded promises of liberality and reform, and he went into the Government with these promises fresh upon his lips.—Yet the moment he was out of the reach of the electors, he did exactly as he will do now if he [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ARRIVAL OF THE "BOHEMIAN."

Father Point, Aug. 19.

The Bohemian, from Liverpool on the 8th, via Londonderry on the 9th, arrived at 4 o'clock, p. m. to-day.

The Bohemian took £15,000 for New York.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Times has another article bitterly sarcastic on the battle of Bull's Run. It says there must rise a gathering doubt that the Southern nut is too hard to crack, and that the military line, as a matter of business, does not answer.

The same article ridicules and laughs at the threats of a prominent New York orator against England's going into the ports. It fears the question of a blockade in America may involve England in some difficult complication.

The Times remarks that there is a little cloud, which, although not quite so large as a man's hand, may come to overshadow the whole sky.

On the last day of the session Lord Palmerston states his views on the question. He said in effect, if the blockading force should allow any one vessel to enter a blockaded port by a payment of duties, the blockade from that moment is raised.

FOREIGN NEWS ITEMS.

From Portugal we learn that the war budget has been carried through the Cortes.

The number of persons imprisoned in consequence of the late outbreak at Loja, Spain, was 700.

Queen Victoria, Prince Albert, and a portion of the royal family, will leave Osborne, on the 26th of August, for Ireland.

The Havre journals state that the harvest has commenced in that neighborhood with favorable weather. The wheat is quite ripe and of good quality.

The reports from France respecting the harvest are not satisfactory. The crop is deficient and the weight is inferior. Wheat had risen 1f. per sack. Americas red wheat was more abundant.

Another grand review of the troops at the Curragh of Kildare, in which the Prince of Wales went through all the manœuvres of the day on foot as a lieutenant in the guards, took place on the 1st inst.

The Italians in Lisbon were making arrangements for a solemn high mass for the soul of Cavour, but the ecclesiastical authorities were strongly opposing the movement.

From Spain we learn that the powder magazine, in Arragon, had been blown up. One hundred mills were burst down, and twenty workmen were killed or seriously wounded.

The Austrian government has just suspended the permission accorded to manufacturers of arms to send off, without special authorization, small packages not exceeding six of each sort. No reason is given for this measure.

The treaty of commerce between England and Turkey, which is to come into operation on the 1st of October, has been laid before Parliament. No charge is to be made on British produce or goods in British ships passing through the Straits.

The London Herald of the 20th July, says:—It is announced that Captain Vane Hall, late commander of the Great Eastern, has been appointed general manager and representative of the Intercolonial Royal Steamship Company in Australia and New Zealand and has taken his departure by the Accounts have been received in Paris from China and Japan to the 1st and 12th of June respectively. The rebel army was committing great ravages in the neighborhood of Nankin; the English, who were at Sehin Kiang, opposed their advance. They had already menaced Tientsin, but the combined action of the European forces was able to defend that important position and prevent them from approaching it. The utmost tranquility prevailed at Pekin, and hopes were entertained that the Emperor would shortly return to his capital.

Accounts from St. Petersburg state that the Russians are highly satisfied with their commercial treaty with China. Another caravan lately left Kiakhta for Pekin. Moreover, one of the partners in the most important firm of the town of Kia Sin-Ti had arrived at Kiakhta to commit M. Starcova, a Russian merchant, on a visit which he proposes to make to St. Petersburg, to open branch establishments in that city. He remained three days at Kiakhta, examining everything with great curiosity and paying visits to various families. This was the first time a Chinese had visited the town, but it is not doubted that the example will be followed Garibaldi is right. The quarrel in the States is a family quarrel, "and can be settled more easily without foreign interference than with it." It is, as he says, "based upon a political question in which the nations are not interested, and to the settlement of which they cannot become parties." The utterance of these opinions is more creditable to his sagacity and patriotism, and will be of much greater service, than his active participation in conflict, as has been hoped for in some quarters. Garibaldi's first duty to humanity and right is the duty he owes to Italy, and he knows it.

The Northern Whig, (Ireland), referring to the reports of its correspondents on the subject of the potato crop — some indifferent cases of disease having produced anxiety among the farmers in Ulster—proceeds:—We still incline to the conviction that the Irish potato crop of 1861 will be the finest we have seen for a quarter of a century, and that the yield will be abundant in quantity and of excellent quality. A return of fine weather for a month would make the fortune of the Irish farmer. All other crops are flourishing apace. Some flax is laid by the heavy rains, and in white wheat a few cases of rust are reported.—The wet weather has caused a heavy return from the meadows, and the hay will be abundant. The yield of oats and straw will be produce, if we have sun to ripen it, and shelter will, in that case, be very cheap next season. All root crops are reported as in the most flourishing condition.

THE CUNARD STEAM FLEET.

The Cunard Company are at present employed in relinquishing their steamers that by the rule of term of their vessels' service and the construction of more powerful ones, have become unfit for the service. [illegible] A fleet of [illegible] has left [illegible] the Liverpool Commercial we have now to record the withdrawal of the Montreal Ocean [illegible] and Jura, which have been [illegible] and [illegible] The Jura is a fine screw steamer of [illegible] tons and 400 horse power, and her great convenience in transport during the Crimean war. In the course of [illegible] we shall see the Cunard Company will have two new steamers completed from Messrs. Robert Napier & Son, which will probably be the finest specimens of their respective classes in existence. One is the Scotia, a paddle-steamer, about 700 tons larger than the Persia, and the other the China, screw steamer. Both vessels are intended for the mail service between Liverpool and New York.

The Latest War News.

Washington, August 16.

The New York Herald's correspondence says that numberless incidents tend to show that the Confederates are on the eve of attacking our lines. Last night it was discovered that the Confederate Lines had been advanced in all directions towards the Potomac. Their force at Fairfax Court House has been largely increased, heavy forces have been thrown out on all the roads. A large body is proceeding towards the pointed rocks. Their scouting parties are in the immediate vicinity of our lines, along the whole extent of the Potomac.

The Confederates in Baltimore to-day received intelligence that other Confederates were then marching upon Washington, and the information was then published in an extra. It was thought that they were only a little premature.

General Scott does not think that the attack will be made, but General McClellan who was a classmate of Beauregard's, and is familiar with his mode of combination, is well convinced that he will make an attack upon some point of the Potomac.

It is said that the Confederates have nearly 100,000 men between here and Richmond. They know that under the management of Gen. McClellan, our army is becoming daily more formidable in numbers and discipline, and our works more impregnable, while their own forces are getting more disordered and demoralized by the delay, and the very poor prospect of provision for their comfort and maintenance during the winter. They cannot afford to wait for the result of General Scott's plan of starting them out, or Gen. McClellan's programme to have the army perfectly disciplined and prepared before he begins to advance. They must either fight now or see their army melt away from necessity, without another blow being struck. That an attack will be made within a very short time is generally conceded.

One of a regiment of negroes who took part in the battle of Bull's Run, at which time he made his escape, and has since wandered about until finally he got within our lines. He asserts that there are in the Confederate army in Virginia 2,000 or 3,000 negroes, armed with Hall's rifles.—Most of them are from farther south than Virginia. The negroes from down South, he says, have been taught that they would be butchered if they fell into the hands of the Unionists, but those picked up in Virginia have a different idea, and would all run away if they could.

New York, August 17.

A telegraphic despatch has been received from General Freemont, announcing that in the battle of Wilson's Creek Gen. Sweeney received a flesh-wound in the leg, but was able to ride back on his horse to Springfield.

New York, Aug. 16.

The Herald reports the discovery of an attempt to blow up Fort Columbus on Governor's Island. Four men are represented to have gone there on Monday with the intention of laying a train to blow up the magazine and destroy several hundred tons of powder and a large number of soldiers.

Boston, August 17.

A gentleman just arrived from the West Indies, reports that the ship Alliance, Capt. Deforest, formerly of Charleston, S. C., but now under British colors, sailed on Monday last for Havana with a cargo of contraband goods. Her destination is well known to be Charleston. The Captain boasted that he would run the blockade without any difficulty.

The Tribune's correspondence says: An attack on Washington is looked for by many of the best informed officers. The Confederates have advanced their lines, and are in force within a short distance of the River, and are gathering means of transportation. They have large encampments this side of Fairfax, but probably the bulk of the advanced corps is on the Upper Potomac.

The New York Times denies the assertion that it opposes coercise. It promises to make concessions to the South if the Confederates will but return to the Union. The Tribune also shows signs of yielding. It only desires that the North shall win a great battle, that it may negociate as the victor instead of the vanquished. The partisan activity of the Northern Democracy evidently excites alarm.

The startling announcement made recently that England and France had formed an alliance with a view to combined action on American affairs is untrue, but the facts are that three weeks ago M. Thouvenal, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, transmitted a note to the English Government proposing that the two Cabinets come to a closer understanding with respect to the United States. To this note the English Government sent a message asking a more explicit statement. The reply received was that England should unite with France for the purpose of procuring in the autumn a supply of tobacco and cotton from the United States. The English Government then responded that it could enter into no such engagement.

We have the highest authority for saying that not one Government in Europe has remonstrated against closing the Confederate ports.

REDUCTION OF THE RATE OF DISCOUNT BY THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

From the London News.

The Directors of the Bank of England, at their weekly court to-day, reduced the minimum rate of discount from 6 per cent, at which it was fixed on the 16th of May, to 5.

From the course of the Bank accounts and from the fall in the value of money all on hand stood in a point fully 1 per cent below the Bank rate, this step had been generally anticipated. It has therefore little effect beyond contributing to confirm the more hopeful impression which has been occasioned lately by the fine weather and by the improvement in the American exchange. It will be seen by the return given below, however, that the addition to the Bank's resources during last week scarcely equals expectation.

The reduction in the rate caused but a slight accession of business at the discount office at the Bank to-day, yet in the open market accommodation was not obtainable below At to 5 per cent, [illegible] and demand being experienced.

In consequence of the alteration at the Bank, the Joint Stock Banks have reduced the rate allowed for deposits from 5 to 4 per cent, except that the London and Westminster allow only 3 for sums below £200. The discount establishments will henceforward give 4 per cent, instead of 4½ "at call," and 4¼, instead of 5, "at notice."

In the Stock Exchange money was again in demand, and the rates for short loans on Government Securities were 4 to 4½ per cent.

The effect of the Bank measure on the funds is a rise of only ¼ per cent. It would probably have been more but for some further large sales of stock for immediate delivery.

GENERAL LYON.

One of the principal features of the march in Missouri is Gen. Lyon and his German body-guard. The latter is composed of ten athletic St. Louis butchers, each mounted on a powerful horse and armed with a heavy cavalry sword and a pair of navy revolvers; each wears a light hat turned up on the left side and decorated with a white ostrich plume. Almost any time Gen. Lyon, accompanied by half-a dozen of these savage looking fellows, may be seen plying along the line, or a small squad of them, or singly galloping fiercely to the front or rear, or straight out into the open country. If the General goes into a house, a half a dozen of them will be seen in front standing like statues at the bridles of their horses—if he mounts along in advance of the train, the clashing of their long sabres is heard beside him—stop where he will, there will always be seen a stolid of white-plumed hor emen awaiting patiently his movements.—They are all fearless riders—jump fences on a dead run, leap ditches, gallop down steep descents, and, in fact, never ride unless their horses can run, unless compelled by some urgent necessity. Independent of their duty as body-guards, they act as messengers, scouts, &c., and in consequence have plenty to do. They are commanded by a lieutenant; and from his appearance, and daring horsemanship, will if occasion demands, whip a dozen of their weight in chivalry.

A FEMALE SPY IN UNIFORM.

On Sunday, July 21st, a female soldier was discovered in the Kentucky First. She enlisted in Company D, on the 10th of May last, and had been doing soldier duty ever since. On all long marches she carried her musket and knapsack the whole time and never lagged behind. It is astonishing to every one how she stood up under it. On being closely questioned, she confessed that she was a spy and in constant communication with the rebels—that she is a member of the Knights of the Golden Circle, and through that order, members of which she finds everywhere, she has found the means of forwarding her letters to the rebels. She has been kept a prisoner ever since, and will be forwarded to Columbus for safe keeping. She joined the regiment in Cincinnati, her expectation being to get into Gen. McClellan's army. She was caught writing letters describing our movements to the enemy.

FREE TRADE.

The Mansion House entertainment last night in honour of Mr. Cobden was marked by great enthusiasm. The Lord Mayor, (Sir W. Cubitt, M. P.,) although a Conservative, in a free trader; and the Corporation of the city of London has always been loyal to the maxim enunciated forty-one years ago by Mr. Baring, afterwards Lord Ashburton, that "buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest, which regulates the transactions of individual merchants, is equally applicable as the best rule of trade of whole nations." Mr. Cobden's speech was marked by peculiar clearness, as well as by a rare abstinence from either self-laudation or of severity towards his political opponents, and, I may add, his slanderers at the press in connection with the French treaty. The address (in French) of M. Chevalier, the illustrious French Free-trade apostle, was full of thought, and indicated a man far before his country and age—as respects French ideas—on the questions of international freedom of intercourse and the duty of mutual peace. Mr. Bright was justified in laughing at the bugbears of the past, even as cherished by living statesmen. He is over-sanguine, I fear, in expecting that any efforts of politicians or Free traders can necessarily ensure peace between England and France. Even if all the people of the latter were agreed to love us, what are we to say if it suited imperial interests some day to give the signal for strife to an army of 400,000 men panting for plunder and glory! Mr. Bright did well in urging the study of the French language on our young people—as the Minister of public Instruction is very anxious to see done in France as to the English language, "with the view of increasing better mutual understanding," in order to "give confidence where suspicion has existed, and to plant affection where hate has been known almost for ages to continue."—London Letter.

DR. LA'MERT

OF LONDON,

TO THE NORTH AMERICAN PROVINCES.

DR. LA'MERT of Bedford Square, London, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, &c.; author of "Self-preservation," the "Science of Life," and "Second Life," begs to intimate to his Patients and the Public that he proposes in August, making a Professional visit to the British North American Provinces, commencing with Halifax, N. S., and that he will after a while visit St. John, and Lower and Upper Canada.

Due notice will be given in future advertisements of Dr. La'mert's arrival and of his place of residence in the several towns in which he may be consulted, either personally or by correspondence. In making this announcement, Dr. La'mert wishes to point out to parties the advantages that invariably result from a personal letter here, and the minute directions that will be afforded to those who are desirous of bringing their cases under his immediate supervision. Dr. La'mert, moreover cannot too strongly urge on those who have already been under his care or who may have had correspondence with him, the importance of the occasion that will present itself of clearing up any doubts that may have existed in regard to their cases, and would particularly impress upon them the importance of putting themselves as quickly as possible into personal communication with him during his necessarily limited stay, which under no circumstances can be prolonged beyond the date hereafter to be announced.

In order that no obstacle may be presented to the completion of the treatment of such cases, Dr. La'Mert will be provided with the correspondence, notes &c., connected with each individual case in the Colonies that has come under his care during the past three years. Those who contemplate availing themselves of Dr. La'Mert's services are recommended, in the interim, to procure from one of the undermentioned local agents his work on a Medical Treatise on Nervous Debility and Functional Weakness more particularly in reference to the Indiscretions and Disorders of the Generative System, with numerous Engravings and Descriptive Cases.

Self-Preservation;

The object of the work is not to undertake any particular hypothesis, but to enable every one to a thousand for himself the structure and functions of the organs concerned in the fulfilment of the Physical Obligations of the Married State; to acquaint him with the consequences arising from the excesses to prevent unnecessary misapprehension from unfounded fears, and to indicate when these fears are well founded the means of speedy relief. The work is not crowded with the technicalities of ordinary professional books, nor does it present the crudeness which characterizes the so-called "popular works" on the subject.

"Self-Preservation" may be had in a sealed envelope, price One Shilling sterling, of Messrs Clubb and Co., St John, N. B.; E. G. Fuller, Express Agent, Halifax, N.S.; or he Author will forward it, post free, on receipt of Colonial postage stamps to the amount of 13 pence sterling.

PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND RELIANCE

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting power, is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white zinc-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the latter, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, causing the cloud of its consistent accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But it is felt in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected the first Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to sell them at a trifling advan e upon the Galvanized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 50 feet from the point.

PIPER & HINDALL,
60 Young Street.

Toronto, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERvised the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preserving the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

(Signed) HENRY CROFT, D.C.L.
Prof. of Chemistry.

Toronto, July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the sale of Piper & Hindall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Iron Rods on blocks recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The Improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I cordially concur in Dr. Browne's observations. Also have bought one of the same Rods for my two cottages on Bank Street.

A. HISLOCK.

A CANADIAN

LITERARY PAPER.

FOR

The Canadian People.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. ☜

ON Saturday 1st June last, the undersigned commenced in Toronto the publication of a weekly family newspaper, entitled which altogether eschews subjects of a controversial character, both in politics and religion, and presents itself as a medium for developing the literary talents of the country.

"The Home Journal,"

The Home Journal is devoted to choice literature—Tales, Essays, Poetry, Reviews, Criticism, Biography, Art, Music, News, &c., and has already enlisted in its columns some of the best talent of the country.

To commence by the publication of a Literary Interview in Canada, after many letters of solicitation, was considered hazardous; but the undersigned is now happy to say, after five weeks of publication, that he has received such encouragement from both the press of the country and the public, as causes him to feel quite confident of its ultimate success.

His aims at making the Home Journal equal to any paper of its character to be found in any country of whatsoever are unsurpassed. Believing that the people of Canada will contribute to its maintenance, when made aware of its importance and character.

The Home Journal is published every Saturday, at Toronto, and mailed in time to reach the remotest parts of the Province, on the date of publication.

Terms of subscription are $1.50 in advance. Payments may be made as follows:—For four months, 50 cents; for eight months, $1; for twelve months, $1.50.

Any person sending the names of five subscribers, with their subscription, will be entitled to one copy, and the undersigned wants to receive on the Canada throughout the country, many continuous canvassing with this arrangement.

All letters and communications should be addressed (post-paid), to

WM. HAGLEY,
Publisher, Colborne Street.

JOHN JOHNSTON ON DRAINING.

Every intelligent farmer in America must have heard of John Johnston, of Geneva, N. Y. Besides being an excellent farmer, he is perhaps the best authority on agricultural subjects in this country. The following is a letter on draining, written by Mr. Johnston in reply to the inquiries of a Canadian farmer:

"DEAR SIR,—Yours of the 8th instant is received, and I will answer the best way I can. It is impossible for me to tell how far apart drains should be, unless I saw the land, and not even the, unless I saw some drains dug; and even then I would if I could commence draining when the land was very wet, and experiment from 33 to 40 feet, until I saw which made the land driest. It cannot be made too dry; if your subsoil is very tenacious at 2 to 2½ feet deep, your drains may require to be less than 33 feet apart. With regard to depth, that depends how deep you have to go before you get to a hard bottom. Drains ought to be at least 2½ feet deep, but, if possible, you should get down until the water comes in at the sides of the drains and not rise from the bottom of your ditch. If you have to go 3½ or 4 feet before you get as deep as the water lays, although the digging costs a great deal more, you save a great deal in tiles, as you might perhaps put your drains 50 feet or more apart; 4 inches is deep enough for your main drains. I like what is called horse-shoe tiles best for the side drains, if the bottom is hard. Side drains may be the length of your farm, no matter how long that is. If much water runs, you have to increase the size of the tile near the lower end. I have lateral or side drains, 150 rods long and more; and I have no doubt but they might answer ten times that if you increase the size of the tile where needed, but 2 or 2½ inch tiles ought to answer in any side drains. There is a drain plough made some twelve miles east of this, called the Thomas drain plough; costs, I think, not over $12 or $15, that I hear several speak well of, and said to be very profitable; but, if you can get ditches dug as cheap as I hear they can in Whitby and Darlington, C.W., —say 8 cents per rod for three feet drains—I would never bother with ditch-plows. I could procure you either of these ploughs if you wish it; I am positive as to the price. Farmers have generally enough to do with their horses without putting them to digging ditches. Paddy and his spade is the only machine I used to dig ditches, and I think them better than any other thing yet invented; but I have not seen either of the above ploughs at work, yet I hear them well spoken of by those who have used them. I am sure of one thing, that under-draining is very profitable when properly done."

WIND AND WATER.

One of the members of the Lower House of the Legislature of the State of New York rejoiced in the name of Bloss. He had the honor of representing the County of Monroe, and if his sagacity as a legislator did not win for him the respect of his associates, his eccentricities often ministered to their entertainment. One day in the midst of a windy harangue that had become intolerable for its length and emptiness, a "gassy" member from the metropolis stopped to take a drink of water. Bloss sprang to his feet and cried—

"Mr Speaker, I call the gentleman from New York to order!"

The whole Assembly were startled and thrilled; the "member from New York" sat on aghast, with the glass in his hand, while the speaker said—

"The gentleman from Monroe will please to state his point of order."

To which Mr. Bloss with great gravity replied—

"I submit, sir, that it is not in order for a wind mill to go by water!"

It was a shot between wind and water, the sentous orator was confounded, and put himself and his glass down together.

NATURE'S LESSONS OF RELIGION.

There is a religion in everything around us—a calm and holy religion in the unbreathing things of nature, which man would do well to imitate. It is a meek and blessed influence, stealing as it were, unawares upon the heart. It comes—it has no terror or gloom in its approaches. It has nothing to rouse up the passions—it is untrammelled by the creeds and unshadowed by the superstitions of man. It is fresh from the hands of the Author, and glowing with the immediate presence of the great spirit which pervades and quickens it. It is written on the arched sky—it looks out from every star—it is among the hills and valleys of the earth, where the shrubless mountain-top pierces the thin atmosphere of eternal winter, or where the mighty forest fluctuates before the strong winds with its dark waves of green foliage. It is spread out like a legible language upon the broad bosom of the unsleeping ocean. It is this that uplifts the spirit within us, until it is tall enough to overlook the shadows of our place of probation; which breaks link after link the chain that binds us to mortality, and which opens to the imagination a world of spiritual beauty and holiness.—Whitter.

TRIALS OF THE VIRTUOUS.

I believe it has often been remarked, that some of the best and holiest—the jewels of our race—have been most singled out for trial. I do not mean as much those who have been made holy by trial, as those who appear at intervals, "like Autumn violets, sweet and rare," "like their childhood upwards, living among us rather as visitants from another world than inhabitants of this. I believe such are often destined to peculiar troubles; and it need not surprise us that it is so, if we could but remember that sorrow, though its general character may be chastening, yet need not necessarily be so; it may sometimes be rather a gift, a precious opportunity granted to show forth to men and to offer to God, those hidden virtues which, like the plant that throws its fragrance from the wounded part," require the wounds and sufferings of this life for the due exhibition of their beauty and power.—Pride and Irresolution.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular Institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their table—the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year if

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 30x36 inches, entitled,

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS;"

2nd—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Every additional engraving the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly cationa benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It has been, confessedly, illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts., in stamps or coin.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.

L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

PLEASANTLY situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRESSES. The Proprietor expects that his gentlemanly and personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue on as, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
COUNTY OF PETERBORO',
TRENT DIVISION.

GENTLEMEN:

It is now ascertained beyond a doubt that Billa Flint, Esq., of Belleville, is to be the candidate in this Division, in opposition to Mr. Smith. He has been selected on account of his popularity with the electors of the other counties composing this division—North Hastings and Lennox—and on account of his strong and strong claims upon the division for political support. He is a wealthy man, and is above the temptations which men in poor circumstances are necessarily exposed to. He is an independent-liberal man, and a man who does not, like Mr. Smith, go into politics for a living, but to benefit his country. And he only consents to come forward now and enter once more into public life at the solicitation of his party, and because he sees that the public interest requires this sacrifice at his hands. He therefore comes before you with claims for your support made stronger by these circumstances, and because the position of our affairs requires an effort on your part greater than was ever made before. If you desire good government and the honor and prosperity of your country, and if you desire to take the management of its affairs out of the hands of the present incompetent, reckless men who have brought it to the verge of ruin,—among whom is this Mr Smith who now asks your suffrages—if you desire to place that management with honest men, who will really practice economy and perform good legislation, and work for the common welfare, now is the time to show that desire by electing Mr. Billa Flint, who comes before you pledged to these things, and whose antecedents and character warrant you in placing confidence in his integrity, and in his ability to serve you. Personally Mr. Flint is a stranger to me, but as a public man and a politician I believe him to be deserving of your individual support, and I trust that the result of this election will show that he has received it. People who love temperance and sobriety will support him for he is a strict disciplinarian in these matters—practising what he says and doing his utmost to discourage intemperance and to encourage honest industry. Such in brief, is the man who now comes before you as a candidate in opposition to Mr. Smith.

Now let me turn to the other side and examine the position of Mr. Smith. Who and what is he?

He is a gentleman who has taken up politics as a trade, who—his friends say—has wasted all his substance, and who himself, I am told, says, rests all his hopes upon his return to Parliament. He is in fact a mere political gambler—trusting to politics for his living—and to this end ready to sell his country and if need be his friends to secure his object. He holds his services in his hands ready for any party, and every thing that may for the time being be uppermost. He richly deserved the description which Mr. Hinks gave of him on the floor of the House of Assembly, when he was head of the government, namely, that he was an unprincipled, unreliable politician who was ready to sell himself every day, and had to be bought every day.

Mr. Smith in the early part of his political life professed to be a Reformer. His friends believed him, trusted in him and were deceived. Finally in 1858 the necessities of the present Ministry compelled them to offer him a seat in the cabinet. He greedily took the bait—contrary to the advice of his friends—and from that time to this he has been their willing tool, striving hard to show his subserviency and his devotion by a total disregard of all political honesty, and by a readiness to perpetrate any enormity to sustain himself and them in power. For this conduct he has been indignantly rejected by his deceived constituents in West Northumberland, and failing to get returned anywhere else he now comes to you. Will you elect such a man as this. I answer for you emphatically No.

The following extract taken from a leading paper sustains my description of Mr. Smith:

"We do not think that the Government could have presented to the electors of Trent Division a candidate who more fully represents them than Mr. Sidney Smith.

"Through his whole political career the present Postmaster General has never bestowed a thought upon the country or its interests. His sole pursuit has been his own advantage. A stand-and-deliver member of the Parliament of 1854-7, he was elected in the latter year as an Opposition-ist, and a month afterwards sold himself to Mr. John A. Macdonald, and became Postmaster General. Bred a Radical, he is now an Orange Ministerialist; if he were turned out of the Government he would probably be an emancipationist to-morrow. In his turnings and twistings, his utter disregard of consistency and principle, Mr. Smith is a pure type of the body to which he belongs. Cunning, reckless, unscrupulous, false, he hesitates at nothing which will aggrandize himself.

"Mr. Smith is peculiarly a type of the Government of which he is a member in the false professions which he makes to the electors. He presents himself as the advocate of Representation by Population, although the chiefs of the Ministry to which he belongs have declared broadly and decidedly that Representation by Population shall never be tolerated. To keep up the deception on the point, Mr Smith has voted once or twice in favor of representation by population when he knew it would do the principle no good and the Ministry no harm, but he has nearly oftener voted against the principle. For Mr. Smith to present himself as a friend of the rights of Upper Canada is an insult. He it is who prevents Upper Canada obtaining her rights. Were he and others like him to withdraw from the Government, Representation by Population would be granted within the year. He is one of the chief obstacles in the way. And he has the unmitigated impudence to [illegible] Upper Canada [illegible] And they have to thank Mr. [illegible]

It is estimated that at least $30,000 could be saved to the country annually if "strenuous support!"

"Mr. Smith is a type of his Government in the profligacy of his expenditure. He never gave a vote in favour of economy during his entire career. He has drawn immense sums for expenses on his European journeys, far beyond what he could have legitimately disbursed. His management of the Post-office is beguiled by the Ministerial journals, because of the magnificent loss he carried on about the ocean postage, but there never was a Postmaster General who devoted less labour to the duties of his office. The department has not been well managed, as recent developments in the Money Order Office abundantly show, and the expenses have been enormously increased—a fact which we established very clearly while discussing the recent appointments of Mr. Cameron and Mr. Gowan.

"Mr. Smith had everything in his favour in the county of West Northumberland—long residence, personal acquaintanceship, familiarity with local wants—he had used the patronage of his department industriously and judiciously—he employed his money freely, and had a band of rowdies at his beck in the county town who were the terror of peaceable, quiet citizens. He failed, and we can see no reason why he should succeed better in Trent. He has taken his family out to Peterboro' to make himself a resident, a device which will deceive nobody. He has no property, we are informed, within the Division, and circumstances will prevent him acquiring it for the purpose of qualifying himself. If he were elected, we do not believe that he could take his seat. But why should the electors of Trent accept the rejected of West Northumberland; why allow themselves to be used as a convenience for one of Mr. Cartier's Upper Canada hirelings?"

Mr. Smith appears to think that the farce of pretending to reside in Peterboro ought to operate greatly in his favor, but I imagine that he is the only person who entertains such an exalted idea of the value of his residence either here or elsewhere. In the first place however, I do not for one moment believe that Mr. Smith entertains the least notion of making his permanent home in Peterboro. And secondly, if he did do so I am at a loss to discover wherein we should derive any special advantage from it. The following communication from an inhabitant of Cobourg shows the estimation in which Mr. Smith's residence there is held:

SIDNEY SMITH ON THE WING.

(To the Editor of the Globe.)

SIR,—On Friday, before the remains of poor Murney were cold, the Postmaster General left for Peterborough to see what could be done in the way of electing the Postmaster to the Trenton Division. It is said that if they will elect him he will remove immediately to Peterborough, as he wished to do to Port Hope if they would elect him for East Durham. Although I have no wish to see such a man in either the Upper or the Lower House, still it would be a great blessing to Cobourg to get rid of him by almost any means. He has done more to demoralize the inhabitants of Cobourg since he has been amongst them than all other causes put together. Should we be so fortunate as to get rid of him, I do hope we will never again be cursed with a member of the Canadian Government. He has encouraged the worst part of our population to insult and ill-treat the best part of it. He has turned out of office better men than himself, simply because they could not think as he wished them to think. Is it constitutional for a Minister of the Crown, whose office depends upon his being elected by the people, to exercise its duties after he has been pronounced by that people unfit or an improper person to advise the Crown? At all events it is not very seemly that he should be carrying matters with such a high hand, dismissing one here and appointing one there out of his bitter hate. I do not believe that a Bishop Leed or a Judge Jeffreys was ever actuated by such a diabolical spirit of revenge as he has been since he lost his election. He was not satisfied with hounding on his bloodhounds to murder one of the most respectable men in the county, Robert Haraton, but deprived both him and his brother of their post-offices. Surely these matters will be enquired into when the House meets.

REFORMER.

Cobourg, Aug. 17, 1861.

Mr. Smith claims credit to himself for his conduct in Parliament and for his many acts of good Legislation—and he challenges contradiction. Now let us see how his words and his deeds agree.

The present Government took shape distinctly, and without the sanction of Parliament, and in defiance of public opinion and of justice $144,603 out of the remains of the Clergy Reserve money and handed it over to some ministers of the church of England. This was after that Church had commuted and received $1,103,805.—The above money was taken out of the Clergy Reserve money which had been appropriated to the several municipalities of Upper Canada, and of course its payment over to those who were just so much money improperly taken from the people. $120,000 more were unjustly handed over to this same church by means of an improper settlement at the time of the commutation.

Mr. Smith voted approval of the Government in these things.

Twenty millions of dollars of the money of the people of Canada have been swallowed up by the Grand Trunk Railroad. Fifteen millions of this has been contributed and the interest upon it is to be paid by Upper Canada. Over ten millions of this money has been granted by the government with the sanction and support of Mr. Smith, and the few contrary votes on the road which the Province originally built for its advances have been outvoted and the whole debt virtually discharged by a government measure introduced by Mr. Smith.

The people are now assessed over one million of dollars a year, to pay the interest on this debt. And they have to thank Mr. Smith for it.

It is estimated that at least $30,000 could be saved to the country annually if the way of the public printing. Heretofore it has been done by the publishers of the Government Gazette. Every motion which has been made in the House to get this work done by contract and thus save these $30,000, has been systematically voted down by Mr. Smith!

For the past six or seven years upwards of $50,000 have been annually paid for the pretended use of the Baby steam tug boats upon the St. Lawrence, for the towing of vessels. Generally the cost of towing each vessel has been nearly $2,000!—In addition to these large sums the Government lent Mr. Baby $72,000. And finally they bought his boats at a fruitless outlay of $225,544. The loss to the Province by this disgraceful business has been the enormous sum of $504,000. Among those who voted for this monstrous job and thereby squandered $504,000 of the peoples money was Mr. Smith! And remember the Upper Canada paid two-thirds of it.

Upwards of one million of dollars has been squandered in landing piers below Quebec. This squarely a local work, and yet the Province had to pay the money,—and Mr. Smith voted for it! Of this sum Upper Canada paid fully $700,000, and we have to thank Mr. Smith for it.

From 1840 to 1854 inclusive the expense of the militia to the Province was $73,091. From 1855 to 1860 inclusive during the reign of the present Government, of which Mr. Smith is a Member, the expenses [illegible] $400,000 of this.

In 1853 the annual disbursements of the country were but four millions of dollars and some trifle over. In 1858, when Mr. Smith was a member of the Government, they amounted to the enormous sum of over nine millions of dollars. To meet this immense increase of expenditure the Customs duties have been three times increased, but the expenditure, notwithstanding, exceeded the revenues by nearly one million and a half of dollars, which had to be met by borrowed money. The National debt has risen within the last six years from twenty-one millions of dollars to seventy millions. The annual interest on the public debt has so much increased that in 1858 (when Mr. Smith joined the Government), it swallowed nearly sixty per cent of the whole gross revenue of the Province from every source, or seventy-five per cent of the whole revenue, less the expenses of collection. Mr. Smith supported the Government in all this waste and extravagance by his votes in the House, and expressed his approval of it by joining the Government and contin ing the extravagance. And when in 1859 the Government (of which, mark you, Mr. Smith was a member) brought in a Bill to increase, for the third time within three years, the Customs duties, and Mr. Brown moved in amendment that instead of increased customs duties to meet the public deficiency the Government meet it by retrenchment in the public expenditure, Mr. Smith voted nay!

Mr. Smith at his meeting here the other night stated that he had always been the advocate of retrenchment in the expenditure of the public monies, and that the Customs duties favored the poor man. I have already shown the incorrectness of his statement as regards retrenchment, I now propose to show the same thing in reference to the Customs duties:

In 1856 (during the reign of the present Government) the duties on manufactured goods was raised from 12½ to 15 per cent. In 1858 (when Mr. Smith joined the Government) it was raised from 15 to 20 per cent, and within six months afterwards the duty on articles of domestic consumption was raised still higher!

From a return of the importations I find that the duty on the following chief articles of consumption by the masses of the people, averaged the following rates of duties in their declared values in the years named;

	1855.		1859.
Coffee	8½	per cent.	15	per cent.
Molasses	16	"	30	"
Sugar, ref.	32	"	40	"
do., others	27	"	30	"
Tea	11½	"	15	"
Boots and Shoes	12½	"	25	"
Harness	12½	"	20	"
Cot'n Goods	12½	"	20	"
Silk do	12½	"	20	"
Woolen do.	12½	"	20	"

Now can you see whether the customs duties have been increased and whether the poor man does not pay as much as the rich man. Mr. Smith was a member of the Government and advocated this large increase—fifty per cent over the duties of 1855. So high are those duties now,—caused by the extravagance of the Government—that for every dollar's worth of goods that you buy you pay a quarter of a dollar in duties. Or in other words, for every four bushels of wheat which you exchange for necessaries you lose one bushel in the shape of taxes.

There is a sum of $708,000 due the Provincial Treasury on account of the loan to the people of Quebec to help rebuild their houses destroyed by fire. Two thirds of this money has raged to Upper Canada—Upper Canada sufferers by fire have to make good their own losses. Not so with Lower Canada, and as Mr. Smith allows them to keep our money, that you are taxed besides to pay the interest of it.

Fifty thousand acres of the best land of the northwest was given by the Government to the Hudson's Bay Company for $300 Lands containing all the most valuable mineral in that territory. But it is a fenced monopoly, and Mr. Smith advocated the robbery. A motion was made in Parliament by Mr. Brown for enquiry into this transaction, but Mr. Smith helped to save it from enquiry! Mr. Smith was then a Member of the Government. And the Government in the same House have to prevent the settlement of that most fertile and fine country in Upper Canada, namely, Muskoka with the view of their ministers in Lower Canada. This is but one of the most important items that could be named. The total expenditure from 1856 was $43,868,000. Thus for 1858, [illegible] Mr. Smith was a member of the Government] over [illegible] millions more of money than [illegible]

Again in March of that year, Mr. Hartman moved a similar resolution, but it was voted down.

The opponents of Representation by Population then said, "wait till the census is taken and then we will probably go into it." Accordingly, in the Session of 1859, Mr. Brown moved that the census of taken in January, 1857, with a view to a readjustment of representation, and with the belief that the government and their supporters would [illegible] Representation by Population [illegible] Mr. Smith, and a majority of the Government [illegible] that they did not [illegible] Representation by population. And yet Mr. Smith says they were strongly in favor of it.

Again in March, 1859, Mr. Brown, seconded by Mr. Wallbridge, moved an amendment to the address affirming the principle of representation then [illegible] [illegible] we pledge ourselves to give an early consideration during the present session to a measure placing parliamentary representation on a basis of population without regard to a separating line between Upper and Lower Canada."—Lost. Mr. Sidney Smith voting against it!

In June, 1858, the Hon. Malcolm Cameron moved for leave to introduce a bill providing for representation by population, which was voted down by the same parties.

In 1859 the measure met with a like result.

In 1860 Mr. Wallbridge moved a resolution in favor of Representation by Population, when he was met by an amendment by Mr. Scott, that the question of Separate Schools take the place of Mr. Wallbridge's resolution. And this amendment was carried. Such, gentlemen, is the proof of Mr. Smith's sincerity in favor of Representation by Population—voting against it systematically whenever his vote could be of any use, and only pretending to support it when he knew it could do no good. And yet he has the assurance to ask the intelligent electors of the County of Peterboro' to give him their votes, and thus to indorse his acts.

Mr. Flint is a determined and consistent supporter of Representation by Population, and he is the friend of Upper Canada rights. The Peterborough Review says Mr. Flint, when in the House, voted against this principle. So he did. But why did he do it? I can tell you, and I think you will agree with me that he did his duty. At the time referred to—which was I think in 1849—the population of Lower Canada was greater than ours. Mr. Papineau moved to give Lower Canada an increase in the representation, and Mr. Flint, knowing that Upper Canada would soon be the largest, voted against it. And for his devotion to Upper Canada you are asked now to condemn Mr. Flint,

So you are told that during one of the sessions when Mr. Flint was a member he was uniformly absent. During the whole of that session Mr. Flint was confined to his bed by sickness. Yet, notwithstanding this, upon one occasion when an important measure came up he caused himself to be taken from his bed and carried to Toronto, where Parliament was then sitting, that he might vote against it.

Mr. Smith in his speech in the Town Hall here, the other night, dwelt largely upon the vast benefits he had conferred upon the country by his services as Post Master General, and he had the assurance to say that the department could now show a surplus of revenue over expenditure. But he omitted to tell his hearers that in making up his accounts he excluded ocean postage, but omitted the large subsidity which the Province pays the steamers which carry those mails, and which if taken into the account would show a loss instead of a gain to the country. He also boasted of his great desire for retrenchment in the public expenditure. But as a proof of this he forgot to tell his hearers that for his expenses during his short visit to Bytown he received from the public treasury some $14,000! which with his salary as Postmaster General netted him the easy little sum of about $60 a day! Fifty dollars a day is a small sum of money for traveling expenses, particularly for a gentleman of Mr. Smith's pretensions. Fifty dollars a day—when every one knows that now a days a man can travel like a gentleman and drink champaigne too for a good deal less than ten dollars. Fifty dollars a day! Well might Mr. Smith want to retain his seat as Postmaster General. But, gentlemen, he can only do this by means of your votes—and will you who have to work hard from morning till night for oftentimes less than one dollar per day, and who find it hard work to support your families, and make both ends meet, will you vote for Mr. Smith that he may affect a fine display and receive $60 a day? I think not.

Mr. Smith also forgot to mention that it was he who imposed a charge upon newspapers, as I that since his accession to office you have to pay a cent upon each newspaper as you receive it. A charge never heard of before. He forgot also to mention that the Government of which he is an honored member withdrew the grants heretofore paid to our agricultural societies, and that they wasted that money and ten times more for the basest political purposes.

Mr. Smith appears to think that the people of this county will esteem it a great blessing if he tells them he is coming to live in Peterboro.' A letter which appears in the early part of this address will show you how his presence is valued at Cobourg.—But, gentlemen, don't be deceived, for Mr. Smith has no such intention of coming to reside here as you have of going to reside at Cobourg. It is true he has brought out his family, as I make believe during the period of his sessions, but when the election is over they will go back again to their own home at Cobourg, where every thing remains waiting for them just as it was when they occupied it, and where they temporarily left it.

All Mr. Smith cares is at Cobourg and Port Hope. He has nothing here. His sympathies, his feelings, and his interests are at the Front. If you were to venture him to-morrow he would not thank you for it, and he would never think of you more than as if he trusted your services against his you imagine that he will ever look after your wants for any business you may have—for gratitude for any favors you may confer—for the same stands prominently the name of Sidney Smith!

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON BULL RUN.

From the London Telegraph.

The battle of Bull Run was a battle which, if second to Magenta or Solferino in actual slaughter was marked with more envenomed hostility. The dominant feeling in England in the unhappy quarrel is one of outraged and bitter sorrow. If Americans labour for one moment under the impression that the successes or reverses of one or of the other section of the combatants will awaken anything like partizan feeling in this country, they are most grievously mistaken.

From the London Mercury.

It would be premature as yet to hazard any but the most general speculations on the mode in which the late encountment victory is likely to influence the fortunes and character of the American struggle; but there is at all events one hitherto doubtful point which the battle at Manassas Junction has, in all appearance, definitely settled.—It is henceforth as certain as anything can be in Transatlantic politics that idea of re-uniting the dismembered halves of the late American Federation by way of constitutional compromise must be forever considered at an end; for, desperate as such a hope must have long appeared to dispassionate spectators on this side of the Atlantic, it seems to have been to the very last entertained by at least some sections of Northern politicians. But the only chance on which the most sanguine American patriot can have calculated was that, before any important battle should occur to increase the mutual exasperation of North and South, the latter should so sufficiently convinced of the hopelessness of its cause to listen to the more than liberal terms which from the first Northern statesmanship has been prepared to offer. This last slender chance has now been forever destroyed; and the choice before the people of the North is to resign themselves to the dismemberment of the Union without further bloodshed, or to prepare for a colossal war of subjugation against an enemy incurably alienated by bloody hostilities and emboldened by a first great success. The North may choose which it will of these two alternatives, but it never can hope to bring back the seceded States into the Union by any amount of persuasion or concession.—Which of these two alternatives the North will choose is unhappily rendered only too apparent by the accounts which reached us of the public feeling elicited in New York and elsewhere by the first news of the Federal defeat. For the present at least, the war mania with which the population of the Northern States were seized on the tidings of the surrender of Fort Sumpter has been excited into madness by the loss of the first great pitched battle. It is not only in words that the people of the North and their representatives have expressed their determination to go on with the war, regardless of the defeat with which on their side it has been commenced. Their acts show more unmistakably that the news of the rout at Manassas had lashed them into frenzy of warlike impatience. At the date of the last accounts 80,000 fresh troops have been accepted by the Government within three days of the defeat being known at Washington. The disposition of Congress was becoming more and more warlike and a step had been taken towards the realization of our worst apprehensions for the future of the American people by the introduction of a resolution (referred to the military committee) to the effect that "it is the policy of the Government to organise a regular army of 150,000 men." Nor would this force, however dangerous to the constitutional liberties of the citizens of the Union, be at all excessive for the work which would be expected of it. It may readily be assumed that if the Northern States were to press the war against the South with all the vigour promised by their present levies of men and money, the twenty millions of the North would be able in the long run to do more injury to the ten millions of the South than the ten millions of the South could inflict in return. The question, however, is whether, before the perseverance of the Federalists is rewarded by the barren and valueless success which they might not improbably obtain, they will not be tired of a war demanding enormous and ceaseless sacrifices, bringing little honor and no profit. Their present defeat has only whetted their appetite for war, and even a second great reverse might possibly have the same effect; but in the event of a series of such disasters there is no saying how soon a people so impulsive might grow weary of a struggle into which they entered with a sudden burst of enthusiasm not incompatible with an equally sudden reaction.

From the Liverpool Post, Aug. 6.

How long is war to continue? Last week and the week before a notion prevailed in London that a compromise in the dispute was about to take place. The battle of Manassas has sadly disabused the public mind of that fond desire. The Secessionists, victorious, are not likely to return to the Union. The Northerners, defeated, are as little likely to desist from endeavouring to accomplish that work. But the ultimate result what it may, the war we fear is to go on. In the history of all contests since the beginning of the world, the North in domestic strifes, has generally conquered the South. It was so in the olden time; it is so in modern times. The reason why is difficult to state, but the fact on the whole is undoubted. . . . . A new danger, and a serious one, may grow out of this war. According to the telegrams yesterday, the Emperor of the French was about to recognise the independence of the South. This telegram was, probably, premature: but should his Majesty take it into head to do what is intimated, a complication will arise the consequences of which it is now impossible to calculate. We will be very wrong not to set on the conviction that we have a deeper interest in America than in France.

THE REPUBLIC IN DANGER.

From the Philadelphia North American.

We do not wish to play the part of alarmist, but there is no mistaking the meaning of the urgent order from the War Department which we print to-day. It indicates, as plainly as can be, that the danger which has been apprehended from the advance of the rebel armies is growing hourly so imminent as to require some great display on the part of the loyal States come forward more generally to save their capital from seizure and their armies from destruction.

We gain nothing by shutting our eyes to such a crisis as this, or leaving the people to appear in a defensive security. We are woefully deficient in troops every where.—The enemy, long and carefully preparing for the moment when our three months' volunteers should all have to go home, has now suddenly seized the opportunity to make a rapid and general movement in Missouri, Western Virginia, and toward the Potomac. All the rebel States have thus been thrown forward in overwhelming strength and, to some extent, our forces are hardly ready to be

INTERCEPTED LETTERS.

The agent of the Associated Press yesterday took the trouble to telegraph from Washington extracts from private letters said to have been found in an intercepted mail-bag. This could not have been done without the consent of the Post Office Department, and allowing such a publication it seems to us that a singular breach of propriety has been committed, to use no stronger term. So long as the express companies are allowed to keep open postal communication with the rebels, the letters which they carry should be held sacred. If the recent proclamation of the President is intended to make this transportation of mail matter illegal, then letters are contraband as well as munitions of war, and their proper destination is the dead-letter office. The Government is at liberty to avail itself of any information which they may contain, but it has no more right to favor the public with a knowledge of their contents than it has to invite the inquisitive multitude to amuse itself by rummaging amid the mass of documents relating to love and business which the repository referred to is reported to contain.—*N. NAPOLEON III.

A French paper contains the following anecdote which will illustrate the occasional democratic habits of the Emperor:

As the Emperor was, a few days ago, taking one of his drives in the environs of Vichy, he stopped in a village and requested to see the Mayor. That functionary was found at work in his vineyard in wooden shoes and in his shirt sleeves. When told that the Emperor wanted to see him he was so astounded that he could scarcely move. The people who had been sent to seek him led him by the arm to his Majesty. In spite of the kind words which the Emperor used, the poor man was completely bewildered and did not know what to do or say. "Monsieur le Mair," said his Majesty. "Can I do anything for you? Have you anything to ask?" "No sire!" was the answer. "What, you have no poor in your commune?" "No, Sire!" "No roads in need of repair?" "No sire! we want nothing sire!" "Well, Monsieur le Maire," observed the Emperor, "I congratulate you, your commune is the only one in France that has nothing to wish for!" When the mayor regained his self possession, loudly lamented the blunder he had made in not asking for something, if only in order not to be an exception to others. This incident so amused the Emperor, who, however, being convinced that the Mayor must be mistaken sent a sum of money to the commune.

LOST IN THE WOODS.

[From the Ottawa Gazette.]

Some days ago, a young man named Richmond, an American, lately from New York, took it into his head to go out shooting, and wandered in quest of his sport until he found himself in the midst of a thick bush, some miles up the Ottawa. Nothing daunted, he pursued his game in that spirit and delight only to be experienced by one who has been the like circumstanced, until the golden rays of Sol began to sink behind the Western hemisphere. Thinking it was now about fitting time to return to his home he directed his course accordingly, and walked some miles ere he began to see that he was on the wrong track. Retracing his steps he struck out in the direction of another, which he followed for about an hour. Finding this led him still further into the bush, he sat himself down to ponder on his condition. The shades of evening were about closing over him, when he arose to make another attempt at avoiding a night in the woods. This time he was no more successful; but thought he was more out of his way than ever. Night now began to gather around him her gloomy mantle, and the young man gave up all hopes of reaching home that night. He immediately set himself about fixing a place of rest. A short distance from him he perceived a green lawn, in the middle of which was a large beach tree, spreading its green foliage for yards around. Under this he decided to woo "balmy sleep," and pass the night. Placing his gun against the tree, he laid himself down by it, having a stone for his pillow. Thoughts of bears and wolves, of snakes and other reptiles, came flocking to his mind, causing him no small annoyance. He himself had known those who had met their deaths through being attacked by such animals and reptiles. Might he not meet his in like manner? Pondering thus he fell asleep. The sun was breaking forth from amongst her golden splendor, ushering into existence another bright and glorious day—another leaf of time was about to be turned, and laid before us, whereon to record of deeds of good and evil—when our adventurer broke from the arms of Morpheus to fall all but into the fangs of a large—rattle-snake. For a moment he was confounded, during which perspiration rolled from his forehead like large drops of rain. Regaining his wonted courage he grasped his gun, with the butt end of which he made a blow at the reptile, which missing, came in contact with a tree. The gun being loaded, the force of the blow caused its discharge, which fortunately buried itself in the earth, our hero narrowly escaping with his life.—Turning around to his antagonist he found it with eyes like fire fixed steadily upon him and fangs outstretched to their utmost extent, meanwhile curling itself into an attitude for a run. He then made another blow at the snake, dealing it more successfully than the first, killing it as he thought on the instant. Daylight had now fairly set in, and having re-charged his gun, he struck out another path by which he thought to extricate himself, picking berries as he passed along to subdue the pangs of hunger which was now beginning to make her demands. Having journeyed about a miles he heard a rustling behind him, and turning round, he beheld his old antagonist the snake! closely upon his heels. Raising his gun, he fired, and threw its head completely off. This time there was no doubt of its being dead, as it lay outstretched on the earth. Being not assured that he would not meet another enemy, he again loaded his gun, and pursued his journey. It was now noon, and as yet he could find no outlet to the bush. Every step increased to take him more into the labyrinth than ever.—Thus he travelled till evening again closed around him, and he made up his mind to spend another night in the woods. Grave forebodings had indeed nothing to the shape of fear for almost two days. Weakness was fast occupying upon him, and he became somewhat alarmed. Having decided upon another spot to rest his wearied limbs till morn, his senses were soon steeped in forgetfulness. Between the hours of one and two he was awakened by a low growl which was undoubtedly that of a bear; for, on regaining his feet, he was immediately confronted by a most formidable looking figure of that species. Fortunately his gun was already primed, and he took deadly aim, bringing his heavenly driven spear into action with a groan like that of thunder. Then, nothing discouraged, attempted to rise, and was almost making an attack; when he received a desperate blow from the butt end of our adventurer's gun, bringing Bruin this time totally to the earth, where he lay apparently writhing in the agonies of death. In this condition he left him, rushing madly into the forehead pursuing a course he knew not whither. That wandering, he was startled by the report of a gun, then another. He immediately changed his direction to that whence these reports seemed to emanate. Half an hour's walk brought him into the sound of human voices. His heart now leaped with joy. A few more steps and he found himself in the midst of a company of trappers, to whom he told his adventure. They treated him with the greatest kindness, giving him part of their food. He had strayed many miles out of his way, and had it not been for the timely aid of these trappers, at this very day, he might still have been—"lost in the woods."

THE TRENT DIVISION.

The Hon. Sidney Smith was a candidate for this Division, vacant by the death of the Hon. Mr. Murney. The Government is fitly represented by their candidate. The whole career of Mr. Smith has been one of self aggrandizement. He never cared a pin for the interests of the country or the interests of the constituency which he lately represented, except, in so far as they were bound up in himself. When he was rejected by West Northumberland, he proved this by the course he pursued. Enraged at his defeat, he publicly threatened to injure the very constituency to which he is indebted for the position he now occupies, instead of being grateful for its past kindness.

Had Mr. Smith acted towards his constituents in good faith and carried out the principles he professed when he was first returned he would still be the representative of West Northumberland. But he sold himself for a mess of pottage and he now seeks to secure his tottering position by appealing to the electors of Trent Division.

What chance a man who was defeated in his own constituency, by a person almost unknown in political matters, can have in an outside constituency we cannot see. Mr. Smith had money, powerful and influential friends, long residence, an intimate knowledge of the wants and wishes of West Northumberland, and a personal acquaintance with almost every elector in his favor, and yet he was beaten. Alas, in Trent Division, will have to face practically the same issues as he did at the last election in West Northumberland, with the loss of all those local circumstances which were then so much in his favor, and it seems to us that success is impossible—a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Mr. Smith claims, and it is claimed for him, that he possesses great administrative powers; that the duties of his office were never better performed, and that the postal service has reached a state of perfection never before attained. It is also said that he displayed statesman-like powers of a high order in the negociation of our foreign postal arrangements, and that without his foresight, skill, perseverance, and energy the perfection claimed to exist in the Postal Department would not now be found; and that therefore the country is deeply indebted to him. After all the praise lavished upon this Department, we doubt much, whether, with its increased expenditure, and with its losses in the Money Order Department, it reflects much credit upon Mr. Smith. At all events, we certainly think, no matter how well it is conducted and how much credit there may be due to Mr. Smith, that the benefits which were derived from it under his control form no compensation for the recklessness with which we have been ruled by that Ministry of which Mr. Smith is a part, and supports so well.

Mr. Smith, in his address, devotes a good deal of space to the question of University Reform, and most ingeniously bids for the Methodist vote through this question. He fishes for votes with a Law Reform bait; he is anxious to do away with the Rectories and thus settle the only remaining Clergy Reserve Question; he will support a policy for securing a federation of the British North American Provinces; and is actually in favor of Representation by Population, to which, provided "it should be urged temperately and firmly," he will give his strenuous support.

Representation by Population! now, this Mr. Smith is really too good of you. It is more than we had a right to ask and it is decidedly more than we ever expected from your past course and from the declarations, oft repeated, of all your leaders and masters. It is true, you voted, like our late member, for the principle occasionally for the purpose of amusing your constituents and keeping them in good humor, but whenever a time came when your vote would have assisted in carrying out the principle, it was not given. However, promises are easily made, pledges are easily given, and both are as easily broken, and if you can gull and blind the people with them all we have got to say is, they deserve to be gulled and hoodwinked.

The whole address is crafty and hair splitting, and so ambiguously worded it never can rise up in judgment against him, no matter what course he might pursue.——Port Hope Guide.

TRENT DIVISION.

The Ministerial organs will keep up the cry that Mr. Smith has been an efficient Postmaster General, and as such is entitled to election. We believe it to be capable of proof that Mr. Smith was only ninety days in attendance in his office during a period of more than two years, and we shall be prepared with the evidence when it is called for. The truth is that Mr. Griffin the Assistant Postmaster has done all the work, and Mr Smith has taken the credit. It was Mr Allan, of Edmonstone, Allan & Co., who first suggested the postal arrangements with Europe and the States, Mr. Griffin laid the plans, and Mr. Smith went to Europe to write a few letters and enjoy himself at the public expense. The Post Office is not self-sustaining now; its revenue was ruined a little by the re-imposition of the postage on newspapers, which the people did not desire, but in no other way has the income been benefitted by Mr. Smith's measures. The Postmaster General's claims to election on account of his services as a member of the Executive are nil.

What have been his political services? Has he not been the tool of Mr. Cartier in all his recent movements? Did he not come to the rescue of the French Canadian dictator when he was at the point of despair? In he not now anxious to prop up the rotten fabric of Mr. Cartier's power? He pretends to be in favour of Representation by Population, and he hopes in office two rebel Ministers pledged to oppose it to the death. If he abandoned them they would go out, and Representation by Population would be carried. He remains and justice to Upper Canada is refused.

Who has been the willing tool of Mr. Cartier in brushing up our connection with the Hudson's Bay Territory? Who but Mr. Smith? It did not suit the little dabbler that the Northwest should be united, and the attempt was made more than once. Traders, fabricated and adroit who went to Lake Superior as the pledge of Government that a union should not be effected, were sent to

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We beg to remind our subscribers that many of them are in arrears for their subscriptions; many for one year, not a few for two years, while nearly all have entered on a third year with us, which according to our terms should be paid in advance. These sums though small separately amount collectively to a very large sum, and it is of the greatest importance to us that we be paid up punctually. The cost of publishing a newspaper is no trifle, and there are engagements to be met daily;—it is impossible, therefore, for a publisher to give his journal that attention and care it should have, if his mind is daily harrassed by embarrassments and difficulties. The credit system is a drag to the wheels of any enterprise, that often cannot be averted, but where the sums are so small as in our case there is no excuse to our debtors. We hope our friends will lose no time in settling with us, by calling at our office or remitting by mail.

Subscribers whose subscriptions expired on the 20th instant, will be allowed to 20th September to renew the same at our advance rates; after that date $2 will be charged in every case. Parties two years in arrears by remitting $5 before the 20th of September, will be credited to August 20th, 1862.

THE TRENT ELECTION.

The Postmaster General, as we intimated last week, is to be opposed by Mr. Billa Flint, whose address appears in our columns to-day. Although Mr. Flint has been represented by the Leader as belonging to the antediluvian age, his address betokens him as more in advance of the age than the man that journal delights to honor. And as for the sweeping charges of the Review against Mr. Flint, we want that journal to make good those charges by a reference to his votes. There can be no difficulty here, as the editor says he has "examined the Journals." We want the eight Ecclesiastical Corporations that he "swallowed," when he voted down Representation by Population, and all those wicked votes that were sufficient to "damn any ordinary mortal." The attention of the Catholic voters of the Trent Division is specially called to what is made by the Review a fault in Mr. Flint, that he "was a consenting party to the introduction of the Separate clause into the School Bill;" yet that unscrupulous print will doubtless urge Catholics to oppose the man that consented to introduce Separate Schools. The editor says, "we cannot pretend at a moment's notice to give all the points in Mr. Flint's character, but it shall be our pleasant duty, seeing he is now a candidate for our suffrages, to introduce him hereafter more fully to the electors." No one doubts the pleasure with which the Review always goes into a dirty job. The files of that journal contain ample evidence that exposing the faults of any one its editor dislikes has always been a pleasant duty to him; and before the election is over Mr. Flint may reckon on any amount of charges manufactured to order. We wait, however, the promised expose. Meantime, we notice the adulatory introduction of his protege, the Hon. Postmaster General, and in glancing it over we laughed right out at the efforts made to be correct in etiquette in bringing into notice the man he delights to honor. He says: "The Hon. Postmaster General, who by an extraordinary combination of political elements, was defeated by the narrow majority of 27, in the County of Northumberland, has with a sense of the necessities of his position and with a nice appreciation of British practice in such cases, announced himself a candidate, and asks from the electors of this Division, comprising three Counties, that expression of confidence in him as a Departmental officer, and in the general political policy he has pursued, which a change of 14 votes would have secured to him from Northumberland." This is rather a rosy bit of bifalatia, and is worthy of dissection. The "extraordinary combination of political elements" is merely a flourish of trumpets, intended to convey that Mr. Smith's defeat was something out of the common course of events now-a-days, so as to hide the mortification attendant upon a failure of being returned for his own constituency. The "necessities of his (Smith's) position" may signify anything you please. It may have reference to a rumor afloat before the last session of Parliament, that Mr. Smith, owing to the "necessities of his position," had placed his resignation as Postmaster General in the Governor's hands; or it may mean something else. At all events, his resignation then was looked for daily, consequent upon the "necessities of his position." The richest morceaux, however, of the above eloquent extract is the "nice appreciation of British practice," on the part of the Postmaster General, wherein it is made to appear that Mr. Smith would wait till a vacancy occurred before he would again offer himself as a candidate; quiescate to British practice. This, we suppose, signifies that the hon. gentleman sought to establish a claim addressing the electors in the Town Hall. Yet in the report of that address in the Review Mr. Smith is represented to have stated that he had actually left his office to contest one of the twelve constituencies offered to him since his defeat, when he heard of the death of Mr. Murney. "I determined at once" he says, "to follow British practice and clear myself for the first vacant constituency that occurred;" so that the "nice appreciation" and the following of "British practice" is all gammon. Mr. Smith simply came to the Trent Division as he imagined it afforded the best chance of his being elected, as well that a place where there was a vacancy was a more legitimate and less objectionable one than where this did not occur. If he did not make virtue of a necessity, it was the next thing to it.—But to attribute to one of the chief performers in the drama of the Double Shuffle a "nice appreciation of British practice," is positively a stretch of truckling to be meteoric in such papers as the Review.—Men that will prate of "British practice," or "constitutionality," who insist upon following the course pointed out in the Statutes and the supremacy of the law, and follow or excuse the course adopted by the members of the present Government three years since, must have perverted views of law and constitutionality, or consciences void of feeling. The whole of the Ministry deserve rejection, and we do trust that our own good County will mark its disapprobation upon the one of those men now seeking an "expression of confidence" from them, as it did lately to the apologist and supporter of the corrupt administration of which Mr. Smith is a member. We cannot understand how electors who have heretofore signified their disapproval of the Cartier-McDonald ministry, by recording their votes against an upholder of that ministry, can now turn round and support and vote for one of its prominent members. We observe names in the requisition to Mr. Smith of whom we expected better things, and regret that they should put themselves in accordance a position. We exhort them to repent and do their first works, and withdraw from supporting a man pursuing a "political policy" in the Government like that of Sidney Smith—a policy that they erewhile have been loud in condemning.—We hope Peterborough will not stultify itself by reversing that noble vote it gave for the condemnation of the Ministry by electing the gallant Col. Haultain.

TOWN COUNCIL.

TUESDAY, August 27, 1861.

The Council met. Present—His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs. Toole, Ormond, Dickson, Eastland, Bradfield, Chamberlain, Menzies and Stevenson.

Communications from Thomas Beavis, Wm. O'Donnell, Thomas Hutchinson and John Harty, asking for the Collectorship, vacant by the death of Thomas J. Henthorn were referred to the Committee on Appointments to Office.

Accounts from H. Crosa, R. Hamilton and H. Norton, were referred to the Committee on Finance.

A By-law for amending the By-law recently passed relative to the erection of buildings, was read a third time and passed.

A By-law authorizing the Mayor to issue debentures under the Consolidation Act, was read a first time.

The Mayor was authorized to have necessary repairs done to the Town Hall.

The Council adjourned to Friday morning at 9 o'clock.

We are pleased to see the Council appointing their meetings at day time in place of night, as we are convinced more work will be done by them, and better done, in a much less time.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PIC-NIC.—The children of the First Presbyterian Church Sabbath School, with their parents, teachers, and a few friends, were entertained at a picnic on the grounds adjoining the Quary at the west end of the Town, on Friday afternoon last. After a repast which was bountiful and bewitching, brief but pointed addresses were delivered by the much respected pastor of the Congregation Rev. Mr Roger, and Revs. Messrs. Gilmour and Elsin, and Col. Haultain. Mr Wm Glover, in his usual happy way, led the children in several hymns. At about 6½ o'clock the company separated.

MINISTERIAL CANDOR.—The Montreal Pilot speaks of Mr. Short, as "the defeated of Peterborough," and Mr. Flint as "the rejected of Hastings." A fair specimen of Ministerial candor!

CRICKET.—FRESH LAURELS.—At the return match of Cobourg and Peterborough vs. Toronto, played on the grounds in Ashburnham, on Friday last, Cobourg and Peterboro came out best, with four wickets to go down.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.—A lad, son of Mr. John Bell, of Dummer, while carrying a grain cradle in his arms across a field, tripped and fell on the blade, almost severing one of his legs from his body.

THE WRIT ISSUED.

The Writ for the election in the Trent Division has been issued. The Nomination takes place at Peterborough on the 14th of September, and the Declaration on the 30th. The polling days will be the 23rd and 24th September.

☞ It appears that Government, following the precedent in the case of Montreal and Quebec, has offered to loan the Town of Lindsay the sum of £15,000 for building purposes, at 6 per cent. interest.

☞ A subscription is on foot in Victoria County to present their late member, Mr. John Cameron, with a testimonial.

☞ In a document issued the other day by Mr. Smith's friends, the following passage occurs:—

"Upon Mr. Flint's birth and parentage it is not necessary to dwell. Suffice it to say that he was the son of his father, and his father was Billa Flint before him."

We suppose we are to infer from the above that in Mr. Smith's case the genealogy is not so accurate that he can be reckoned the son of his father. Really, gentlemen, you are outstripping yourselves.

☞ On our First Page will be found an Address which every elector in the County should read and understand. There is but one way to be prepared for the enemy, and that is to be well informed in his former acts and history. Unless you are so you may at any time be imposed upon and bewildered.

THE ADDRESSES.

It has been stated round Town that Mr. Flint is so devoid of learning that he could not write an Address—that the one he has issued was written by some one else. It is an easy matter to make a charge—but often not so easy to prove one. We stated last week that the greater portion of the address issued by Mr. Smith was copied from Hon. John A. Macdonald's address to the electors of Kingston. Below we give the proof. The reader may form his own opinion of the reason for such a struggle offair. Possibly we may be told by the organs of the Review that this is another instance on the part of Mr. Smith of his "nice appreciation of British practice."—We shall wait an explanation. If it is common, or in accordance with "British practice," we plead ignorance. If not, Mr Smith will wish before the election is over that he had written an address of his own:

McDONALD'S.	SMITH'S.
UNIVERSITY REFORM.	UNIVERSITY REFORM
It has long been alleged that the expenditure of the University and University College at Toronto has been excessive, and that the same or a much higher standard of education should be attained at much less cost. The Government see the importance of maintaining this great Provincial Institution in its full efficiency, but they are aware of the same time aware of the great service rendered to the youth of Upper Canada by the other seminaries existing there.—The University Act provides that any surplus remaining after paying the necessary expenses of the Provincial University and College shall be appropriated by the Legislature to the furtherance of academical education. The Government have ordered the issue of a commission to enquire into this expenditure, with the object of applying any surplus that may exist, after fully providing for the requirements of the University or College, to the support of other seats of learning in Upper Canada. They design further to ask the Legislature for additional aid and assistance to those Institutions from the Upper Canada Building Fund—a fund belonging to Upper Canada and applicable only to Upper Canadian purposes. Great progress has been made during the last seven years in LAW REFORM. The expense of litigation has been much decreased, the administration of justice has been brought to every man's door, and the administration of law regarding criminals has been rendered more prompt, certain and efficient.—I think further reform is required, and that the increase of jurisdiction in the County and Division Courts, and a decrease of the fees of their officers, are essential to the interests of the country. The settlement of the CLERGY RESERVE QUESTION has met with the most decided approval of the people of Upper Canada. One fragment of that question still remains in the existence of the Rectories. It was the intention of Government to have introduced a measure into the Legislature for the purpose of their abolition on terms fair and reasonable to all parties concerned.—Technical reasons have hitherto prevented this, but now, I believe, all parties interested are willing to join in a measure for this purpose. The Government will not relax its exertions to effect a FEDERATION OF THE B. N. A. PROVINCES. We must, however, endeavor to take warning by the defects in the constitution of the United States, which are now so painfully made manifest, and to form (if we succeed in a Federation) an efficient Central Government. THE PUBLIC DEBT instead of being $70,000,000 as alleged by the Opposition press, is only $20,000,000.—This debt is not large, and when you consider that all our Public debts are completed—that for the future we will only have to provide for the ordinary administration of affairs, and that the country is rapidly increasing in wealth and population, you will see that the debt will speedily diminish and finally disappear.	THE PUBLIC DEBT, instead of being $70,000,000 as alleged by the Opposition press is only $6,000,000, against which there is an annual sinking fund to the amount of nearly $2,000,000, making the debt only $56,000,000. The debt was incurred by former governments for works of great and permanent utility. The present Ministry have been compelled to provide for its liquidation, and have, therefore contracted
THE TARIFF on important articles, so as to secure a sufficient revenue, and at the same time incidentally to encourage home manufactures. The success of the policy in this respect is already shown by the numerous manufactories of every description which have sprung up in both sections of the Province. The importation of articles under the extended free list has increased from seven to twenty-nine per cent.

When we consider that all our Public Works are completed, that for the future you will only have to provide for the ordinary administration of affairs, and that the country is rapidly increasing in wealth and population, you will see that the debt will speedily diminish and finally disappear, under the policy adopted for its conversion and consolidation.

News of the Week.

The Government have refused to commute the sentence of death passed on the two prisoners, Patterson and Brown, now in Montreal jail. The shrimpy criminals will be executed on Friday, the 6th September.

There are eight thousand men at work upon the canal of Suez.

We regret to learn that Mr. Wm. Lyon Mackenzie, who has played so conspicuous a part in the politics of this country, has for some time been dangerously ill. His recovery is regarded as hopeless.

The Chatham Argus understands that agents from the United States are in Chatham, trying to fill bills for oak timber for gun carriages, &c.

The Clinton Courier gives the proportions of a hog raised in that part of the country, and owned by Mr. Spooner. The dimensions of the animal are—length (from tip of nose to end of tail,) 9ft. 2in.; height 4ft. 1in.; girth 7ft 6in. Seven weeks ago he weighed 893 lbs., and now probably weighs nearly 1,100 lbs. He was two years old last June. He is a cross-breed, out of a sow of Mr. Darks, which is about three parts Berkshire, by Mr. Cresswell's celebrated imported improved Lancashire boar. Visitors to the Provincial Exhibition (at London) will have an opportunity of seeing him.

House Builders in Melbourne earn about eighteen shillings sterling per day.

Brigham Young has thrown off his allegiance to the United States government, and declared the independence of the Territory. The Mormons were arming in every direction to maintain their independence at all hazards.

BAD NEWS FOR TOBACCO CHEWERS.—A letter from the tobacco region of Virginia warns the tobacco chewers of the North against using the weed prepared in the South, as they are poisoning it to kill off the Northern men faster than they can hope to do with powder and ball. If it be true it is certainly very important to those who indulge in its use, and we commend this notice to their careful consideration, leaving them to judge of the value of the information.

A patriotic dodge to raise the wind proved unsuccessful in New York recently. A charming woman called upon the U. S. District Attorney and with much mystery desired to reveal a conspiracy against the President, among persons around the Presidental chair itself. She was advised to hasten to Washington and disclose it, which she was quite willing to do if the officer would advance her $25 to pay her expenses. He thought he could invest more profitably.

It is proposed in England to establish a national gallery of pictures, exemplifying and commemorating individual acts of bravery.

Charles Devlin, a mason employed on the Departmental buildings at Ottawa, on Friday, 16th inst., while engaged with other workmen in hoisting some joists from a scaffolding, fell to the ground, a distance of some twenty feet. He lingered until Monday last, when death terminated his sufferings.

The Ottawa Union says:—"We mentioned in our last the death by drowning of a young lad named Johnston, in the Bay at the foot of the old Brewery landing. For some days all efforts to recover the body failed. Application having been made to Lieut. Forsythe of the Field Battery, that he would try the effect of firing cannon over the water, that officer, on Thursday, conveyed with a good deal of difficulty, a six-pounder to the water's edge, at the foot of the Brewery Hill, and after firing eight rounds the body was found floating in the Bay near the place where the drowning took place."

A conspiracy on the part of a number of the journeymen bakers, to strike to the premises of the master bakers, has recently been brought to light in Montreal. A journeyman named William Brown is now in custody on the charge of setting fire to Mr. Tilton's bakery. He has been required to furnish bail of $4,000—four bondsmen in $1,000 each.

The consumption of claret in London under the French treaty is not so great as was anticipated. It is not strong enough for Mr. John Bull, who condemns it as "weak in creation of the enemy."

The city of Glasgow is now supplied with water from Loch Katrine, and no longer from the Clyde. It is brought to the city by its own gravitation. The receipts from water-rates, however, are not yet large enough to pay expenses and interest on the cost.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveller, under date August 3rd, asserts it as his belief that the ancient capital is by no means safe from capture, and if Government means to make it safe it will take a round million sterling, and a year's time to do it in.—"What was once all forest on the west side," says he, "and impassable for troops, is now an open country, and an army can approach from the west and besiege the city, that would have perished in the attempt in former days." We advise the Bostonians, and the Yankees generally, to confine their attempts to mine fortresses to "bum." Fort Pickens still remains in the hands of the rebels; and the efforts of the North to subdue those rebels have not been so successful as to induce them to make trial of them elsewhere. There is no fear of the Quebec Citadel being taken, not if all Yankeedom was at its back. It stands as firm and is as impregnable as the rock of Gibraltar; and as it will remain while England is Queen of the seas, and her Queen Empress of the world.

THE BLOCKADE.

From the N. Y. Tribune, Aug. 16.

It is argued in some quarters that the policy of the Government in proclaiming a blockade of the Southern ports of the Union contained within itself the germs of difficulties which it were desirable to avoid. A blockade, it is said, is a measure in which foreign nations are concerned. They can inquire into it, and have a right to insist that it shall be executed in a truly effective manner by a sufficient naval force before the entrance to every port.

If, instead of a blockade the President's proclamation had simply declared the ports of the rebellious States closed, and no longer ports of entry, this difficulty would have been avoided. Every nation has a right to indicate what ports shall be accessible to commerce, and, our proper notice, may close and open them as its own necessities shall require. No foreign power has any right to ask whether a port, which the National Government has declared to be closed, is or is not fully blockaded, nor any right to complain of the seizure and confiscation of vessels attempting to enter such a port. It is a matter of domestic policy with which foreigners have no concern.

This would appear to be the view of Congress, which has just enacted a law for the closing of the ports of the whole rebellious sea coast. The President, will, we presume, soon issue the necessary proclamation enforcing this law; and then the animated discussions of the foreign journals on the subject of the blockade, and all the kindred topics will be supernatory.

LUNENBURG GOLD DIGGINGS.

From the Halifax Express, Aug. 12.

We have been informed by parties who visited the "Ovens," on Saturday last, that the accounts of the gold discoveries there have been greatly exaggerated, as they saw no symptoms of that great success as heralded forth by some city presses. It would be a pity were parties to be led astray by flying reports, particularly at this time of the year (harvesting season) is labor more required in the country. We hope to be able to lay before our readers, in our next issue, reliable accounts of what is really being done at the "Ovens." In the meantime we give the following letter from Wm. Cossard, Esq., who has gone to considerable expense and trouble to give the miners a fair trial. Mr. Cossard has taken up, and is in possession of seventy claims at the Ovens. He is determined to give them fair trial.—So far we

LATEST from EUROPE,

ARRIVAL OF THE HIBERNIAN.

Father Point, August 26.

The Hibernian arrived at 2:30 this p.m., with 64 cabin and 142 steerage passengers, and £25,150 in specie.

The North American arrived on Wednesday morning, the 14th instant, and the Great Eastern on Thursday evening the 15th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

At a meeting of the Galway Company the Directors' report was adopted, and it was resolved to issue stock so as to increase the nominal capital from £500,000, to £1,000,000 sterling.

The Archduke Maximilian was on a visit to Southampton relative to the projected Austrian steam line.

Mr. Roebuck had made a speech extolling the constitutional efforts of the Emperor of Austria.

The marriage contract between Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse, was signed at Osborne on the 14th inst.

The Times again expatiates on the financial difficulties accumulating against the American Government, and says that the most earnest wish of the friends of America must be that the difficulties thus in sight may accumulate with sufficient rapidity as to bring the North and South to reason.

FRANCE.

There is a vague report of a growing coolness between France and Austria bearing ominous resemblance to that which preceded the late war.

The Moniteur officially confirms the appointment of M. Rendotte, as minister to Italy.

Raw lead has been admitted free into France, provided the articles manufactured from it are exported.

The Moniteur announces that on account of the additional fete, the Emperor has either remitted or commuted punishment of 1,226 prisoners.

Prince Metternich had taken leave of the Emperor and the latter had gone to Chalons camp.

General Fauto' had arrived at Paris en route for Chatoni.

The dissolution of the Diet was regarded as almost certain. The Cabinet Council demanded it, and also that the Imperial manifesto be addressed to the different peoples of the Austrian empire.

POLAND.

An important popular demonstration took place at Lublin on the 12th. The military commander, by energetic action suppressed the conflict without any more serious consequence than that a number of persons were wounded.

ITALY.

It is reported that General Della Rocca will enter the Cabinet as Minister of War.

Cardinal Andra, President of the congregation of the Index had resigned.

PRUSSIA.

The Independance Belge says that the first act of the new Premier Ministry will be the recognition of the kingdom of Italy.

AUSTRIA.

The Emperor received the address of the Hungarian diet on the 14th.

He replied by a short speech and in general terms.

TURKEY.

Omar Pasha has been ordered to act against Montenegro.

The fall of the minister of Finance was expected.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The overland Mails has been received. News generally anticipated.

The Times' Correspondent at Hong Kong says, the United States Ship Hartford, bearing the flag of officer Stribling is in that harbor.

Having returned from the North, that officer lately organized an expedition up the River Yangtze, and made an arrangement with the Nankin rebels for protection of American property, so he combines diplomatic with naval functions since the departure of Ward. His direct intercourse with Tae Ping has attracted some attention.

The steamers Saginaw and Dacotah were also at Hong Kong.

DIRECT TAX BILL IN THE STATES

The Direct Tax Bill has passed both Houses of Congress. The Bill levies a duty of four cents per pound on coffee, three cents on cocoa, two cents on sugar, two cents on chicory, two cents on ground chicory, fifteen cents on tea, and one dollar and twenty-five cents per gallon on brandy. On other liquors and wines ten cents per gallon ad valorem is added, and on imported and distilled liquors fifty cents. Ten per cent additional duty is levied on silk goods. A tax of three per cent on incomes of eight hundred dollars and upwards is levied, and five per cent is derived from persons residing abroad who draw money from their property in the United States.

A PREACHER KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

The Lafayette (Ind.) Courier, of Aug. 6th, has the following:—

"Mr. Harris, a Methodist preacher, was struck by lightning and instantly killed, near the State line, yesterday. He had preached in the neighborhood on Sunday, and during the storm yesterday, in company with his wife, had taken shelter in the house of one of the brethern at the edge of the wood. There were five or six persons in the room. The deceased was walking backward and forward in front of the door when the bolt descended, and he fell dead at the feet of his wife. Not a groan, nor even a sigh escaped him. His features were as placid as though he were in a quiet slumber, and there was not a mark upon his person to indicate where the bolt took effect. His boot was ripped open, and a watch key attached to his fob melted to drops. All the persons in the room were more or less shocked, but none seriously.

Two men, Pike Gish and George W. Kitter, driving along the road near the South Bend, Indiana, were also struck by lightning, and almost instantly killed. One of the horses was also killed, and the waggon turned upside down."

WHO CAN BEAT IT?—A short time since a New York paper contained a paragraph stating that an American engine had drawn a freight train weighing some 500,-500 lbs., challenging the world to beat it. The Welland road can do it. On the 29th ult., engine No. 5, James Radcliffe, driver, (the new engine lately sent out from England,) drew from Port Colborne to Port Dalhousie a train containing 16,500 bushels of wheat, the weight of which was 495 tons. There were 40 cars, weighing 360 tons, thus making the entire weight of the train 855 tons, or 1,710,000 lbs., beating the American engine by the small item of 1,219,500 lbs., and the driver is confident that the engine will draw ten cars more. This is, unquestionably, the heaviest load ever drawn by an engine; at all events it is the heaviest on record.—St. Catherines Journal.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
TRENT DIVISION.

GENTLEMEN,

The death of your late member requires your suffrages to fill the vacancy.

A number of the Electors from various parts of the Division having urged upon me the necessity of contesting the election in opposition to the Hon. Sidney Smith, Postmaster General, lately defeated for West Northumberland, I have consented to do so for the purpose of defeating him, unless you will consent to place your choice on some other person, in which case I shall be most happy to withdraw in his favor, and give him my support and influence.

Although personally unknown to many of the electors, yet I feel warranted in saying that my past parliamentary career is well known, and if elected I shall have no sectional views to carry out, for any one locality in preference to another, but in all cases be guided by the actual requirements of the whole people.

A BANKRUPT LAW.

I shall support a just and equitable Bankrupt Law for the benefit of Upper Canada Traders, as well as others, but not such a law as the government of which Mr. Smith is a member, were forced to withdraw during the last Session of Parliament.

UNIVERSITY REFORM

Will meet with my warmest support, and any Act which will tend to make the University, or our Colleges, and halls of learning more efficient, in giving the higher branches of Education to the youth of our noble country, will meet with a response from me on all occasions. It is not within my province to know what the government intend to do in reference to the question at issue. Judging from the past I have but little faith in their intentions.

LAW REFORM

I have always been in favor of, as my past votes will show. The lighter the costs can be made for the Debtor, the more easily he can pay them.

CLERGY RESERVE QUESTION.

I thought that this question had been set at rest, but it seems Mr. Smith has dug up a pretended fragment of the old bones, by dragging in the existence of the Rectories. Again, we find what was "the intention of the Government." They had an intention 7 years ago—they have kept it in abeyance ever since—how much longer will they find technical reasons for delay, it is impossible to say. I am favorable to an early settlement of this question.

FEDERATION OF THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

I believe in some of existing warning by the defects of the Constitution of the United States," or [illegible] looking to Washington, we had better amend the defects in our own Constitution and Government, by applying those wholesome checks, which the want of calling their attention to the balances of his stock saved from the late fire, th ough the exertions of his well wishers, and which he is determined to sell at a Great Sacrifice!

VISIT OF
DR. LA'MERT
OF LONDON,
TO THE NORTH AMERICAN PROVINCES.

DR. LA'MERT of Bedford Square, London, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, &c.; author of "Self-preservation," the "Science of Life," and "Second Life," begs to intimate to his Patients and the Public that he proposes in August, making a Professional visit to the British North American Possessions, commencing with Halifax, N. S.; and that he will afterwards visit St. John, N.B., and Lower and Upper Canada.

Due notice will be given in future advertisements of Dr. La'Mert's arrival and of his place of residence in the several towns to which he may be summoned, either personally or by correspondence. In making this intimation, Dr. La'Mert wishes to point out to patients the advantages that invariably result from a personal interview, and the unusual facilities that will be afforded to those who are desirous of bringing their cases under his immediate supervision. Dr. La'Mert, moreover cannot too strongly urge on those parties who have already been under his care, or who may have in correspondence with him, the eligibility of the occasion that will present itself of clearing up any doubts that may have existed in regard to their cases, and would particularly impress upon them the importance of putting themselves as quickly as possible into personal communication with him during his necessarily limited stay, which under no circumstances can be prolonged beyond the dates hereafter to be announced.

In order that no obstacle may be presented to the completion of the treatment of such cases, Dr. La'Mert will be provided with the correspondence, notes, &c., connected with each individual case in the Colonies that has come under his care during the past three years. Those who contemplate availing themselves of Dr. La'Mert's services are recommended, in the interim, to procure from one of the undermentioned local agents his work on Self-Preservation;
a Medical Treatise on Nervous Debility and Functional Weakness, more particularly in reference to the Infirmities and Disorders of the Generative System, with numerous Engravings and Descriptive Cases.

The object of the work is not to maintain any particular hypothesis, but to enable every one to understand for himself the structure and functions of the organs concerned in the fulfilment of the Physical Obligations of the Married State; to acquaint him with the consequences arising from excesses; to prevent unnecessary solicitude from unfounded fears, and to indicate, when those fears are well founded, the means of speedy relief. The work is also provided with the technicalities of ordinary professional books, nor does it present the crudeness which characterizes the so-called "popular works" on the subject.

"Self-Preservation" may be had in a sealed envelope, price One Shilling sterling, of Messrs Chubb and Co., St. John, N. B.; E. G. Fuller, Express Agent, Halifax, N.S.; or the Author will forward it, post free, on receipt of Colonial postage stamps to the amount of 18 pence sterling.

Lightning! Lightning!
PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.
200,000 Feet
OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED
LIGHTNING RODS
JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH
SPRATTS' RENOWNED
PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!
AND RELIABLE
INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud unecharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases, and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Coarbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

PIPER & KENDALL,
62 Yonge Street.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

Prof. of Chemistry.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The Improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations.—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Rank Street.

A CANADIAN LITERARY PAPER.
FOR
The Canadian People.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. ☜

ON Saturday 1st June last, the undersigned commenced in Toronto the publication of a weekly family newspaper, entitled
"The Home Journal,"
which altogether eschews subjects of a controversal character, both in politics and religion, and presents itself as a medium for developing the literary talent of the country.

The Home Journal is devoted to choice literature—Tales, Essays, Poetry, Reviews, Criticism, Biography, Art, Music, News, &c., and has already rallied to its columns some of the best talent of the country.

To commence the publication of a Literary Journal in Canada, after many failures of similar enterprises, was considered hazardous; but the undersigned is now happy to say, after five weeks of experience, that he has received such encouragement from both the press of the country and the public, as causes him to feel quite confident of his ultimate success.

He aims at making the Home Journal equal to any paper of its class, and to do this, a large number of subscribers are necessary. Believing that the people of Canada will contribute to its maintenance, when made aware of its importance and character.

The Home Journal is published every Saturday, at Toronto, and mailed in time to reach the remotest parts of the Province, on the date of publication.

The terms of subscription are $1.50 in advance. Payments may be made as follows:—For four months, 50 cents; for eight months, $1; for twelve months, $1.50.

Any person sending the names of five subscribers, with their subscriptions, will be entitled to one copy, and the undersigned trusts to receive from his friends throughout the country, many remittances according with this, arrangement.

All letters and communications should be addressed (post-paid), to
WM. HALLEY,
Publisher, Colborne Street.

$40 A MONTH!
AGENTS WANTED!

WE want an active Agent in every County in the United States and Canada, to sell the Franklin Sewing Machine. To a limited number of trading agents we will pay a salary of Forty Dollars a month and all expenses. To commence the publication of a Literary Journal in Canada, after many failures of similar enterprises, was considered hazardous; but the undersigned is now happy to say, after five weeks of experience, that he has received such encouragement from both the press of the country and the public, as causes him to feel quite confident of his ultimate success.

He aims at making the Home Journal equal to any paper of its class, and to do this, a large number of subscribers are necessary. Believing that the people of Canada will contribute to its maintenance, when made aware of its importance and character.

The Home Journal is published every Saturday, at Toronto, and mailed in time to reach the remotest parts of the Province, on the date of publication.

The terms of subscription are $1.50 in advance. Payments may be made as follows:—For four months, 50 cents; for eight months, $1; for twelve months, $1.50.

Any person sending the names of five subscribers, with their subscriptions, will be entitled to one copy, and the undersigned trusts to receive from his friends throughout the country, many remittances according with this, arrangement.

All letters and communications should be addressed (post-paid), to

BY-LAW No. CXXXV.

A By-law to repeal By-laws Nos. 100 and 104, and for the better regulating and establishing a Public Market, in the Town of Peterboro,:

WHEREAS, it is necessary and expedient to repeal the By-laws now in force relating to a Market in the Town of Peterborough, and regulate said Market so as to be more in accordance with the interests of the inhabitants of the Town of Peterborough and others. The Town Council of the Town of Peterborough therefore enacts as follows:

1st. That By-laws Nos. 100 and 104, as well as all other By-laws of this Council inconsistent with this By-law, be and the same are hereby repealed.

2nd. That the present Market House and Market Place for the said Town, and so much of the Market Block as is not disposed of for other purposes shall be the Market House and Market Place for the said Town, and all produce, commodities, articles, and things brought in for public sale within the said Town, and which are usually sold in the open air, including meat sold by butchers, shall not be exposed or offered for sale elsewhere except in the cases specially excepted.

3rd. That every day in the year shall be a Market day, except Sundays, Good Friday, Christmas, and such other days as may be universally kept as holidays.

4th. That on all such Market days as aforesaid, that part of the Market House used as a Butcher's Market shall be kept open from 5 o'clock, a. m., until 2 o'clock, p. m., from the 1st day of April until the 1st day of October, and during the remainder of the year from 7 o'clock, a m., until 3 o'clock, p. m., except on Saturdays, when it shall be kept open till nine o'clock, p. m. But the said Market place shall be open for the sale of the articles hereinbefore mentioned at all times during the day.

5th. That all tainted, blown, or measly meat, or fish, poultry, eggs, provisions, or vegetables, offered or exposed for sale, shall be seized and destroyed by the Market Clerk, and the person or persons so offering or exposing the same, shall, upon conviction, be fined as hereinafter provided.

6th. That all Hay and Straw sold within the limits of the Town, when required to be weighed, shall be weighed on the public Scales of the Town, and the Market Clerk, weigh-master, or such other person having charge of the said Scales, shall give the seller thereof a ticket with the gross and net weight, and the date.

7th. That all Butchers occupying Stalls in the Butcher's Market shall keep their Stalls open during market hours of each and every market day.

8th. The Butchers' Stalls shall be annually let by auction, at an upset price, to be determined by the Town Council, and in the event of the Council failing to fix the price, then at the price paid for each Stall the previous year. Such sale to be held the first day of May in each year, of which due notice shall be given by the Clerk of the Council. No Butcher shall bid in or keep more than one Stall, and each person purchasing a Stall shall, before entering on or occupying the same, pay to the said Clerk a quarter's rent in advance, and thereafter pay a quarter's rent on the first days of August, November and February respectively. No purchase, unless specially bargained for at the time, shall be for a less period than one year, and the purchaser of a Stall giving it up before the year shall be held liable for any deficiency of rent that may occur by so giving it up.

9th. In the event of all the Stalls being occupied and other persons wishing to sell Butchers' meat, it shall be lawful for the Mayor to allow such persons to sell meat outside of the Market House, by payment in advance of five dollars per quarter; but no such permission shall be given unless the Stalls inside of the Market House shall all be taken up.

10th. That Farmers and others shall be permitted to sell fresh meat from their waggons, carts, or sleighs, while standing in the Market Place, by the carcase, side, or quarter only.

11th. That any person who shall be guilty of forestalling, regrating, or monopolizing, either in person or by an agent or person by him or her directed or requested so to do, either on the Market Place, the Streets, or within the limits of the said Town, shall be guilty of an infraction of the By-law. Provided always, that the buying or offering to buy by any Butcher, dealer, or Huckster, or the selling or offering for sale, or the bargaining for by any Farmer or other person to any Butcher, dealer, or huckster, either as to quantity or price, of any article, commodity, produce, or thing, usually sold in the open air, brought in for sale in the Town, shall be deemed forestalling, and is hereby prohibited, if done before the hour of eleven o'clock, a. m., of each Market day.

12th. That the Butchers shall keep their Stalls neat and orderly, and shall not have them encumbered with any articles or things besides those legitimately belonging to their business. Nor shall any Butcher incommode the passage through the Market House by blocks, hooks, meat, or anything else. No dogs shall be allowed in the Butchers' Market, and any Butcher keeping or harbouring a dog or dogs in the Market House, shall be deemed guilty of an infraction of this By-law, and subject to the penalty hereinafter imposed.

13th. That no gambling of any nature whatsoever, or games, not obscene, indecent, abusive or blasphemous language, profane swearing, or the like, shall be permitted in the Market House or Market Place.

14th. In the event of the rent for the Market Stalls not being paid at the time specified, it shall be lawful for the Mayor of the said Town to grant his Warrant for seizing and selling, after six hours' notice, any Butcher's meat belonging to the party so in arrear, or which may be found in the Stall on which the rent is due.

15th. The Chief Constable, for the time being, shall be the Market Clerk and the Inspector of Fire Wood. He shall direct and control all persons resorting to the Market with teams, tables, or stands, and shall weigh when required all articles, animals, or things, and shall charge and receive the following fees, viz:

	s.	d.
For weighing each load of Hay, Straw, Merchandize,.....	1	3
For weighing each head of Horses or Cattle,.....		7½
All draughts below 100 lbs.,.....		1
From 100 lbs. to 200 lbs.,.....		2
From 200 lbs. to 600 lbs.,.....		3
Above 600 lbs.,.....		6
Measuring each cord of Wood,.....		2

For each stand or table around the Vernacular, five dollars per annum in advance which fee he shall account for and pay over to the Town Treasurer weekly. He shall also see that the Butchers keep the Market House clean, and shall direct and close the Market daily.

16th. The following articles are exempt from the operations of this By-law, viz., Bibles, Pails, Skins, and Furs.

17th. Any person guilty of any infraction of the provisions of this By-law, or who shall refuse or neglect to pay the fine and costs adjudged thereon, when demanded, may be summoned before the Mayor, or other Justices of the Peace acting for him, and if convicted shall be fined not less than half a dollar, nor more than ten dollars, together with the costs of the prosecution. Which costs may be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, and in default of sufficient distress, he shall be committed to the Common Gaol for a period not exceeding twenty-one days.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other specifics in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will clear and strengthen the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, still times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE success of our enrolled agent attending the
"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"
have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming subscribers.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 20x26 inches, entitled,
"FALSTAFF RECRUITING HIS RECRUITS"
2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,
"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"
3rd.—Four admissions, during the season to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, NY.

In addition to the above benefits, Cash will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 30 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"
is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscription. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $5 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, &c.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogues of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

Address,
C. L. DERBY, Adjury C.A.A.
546 Broadway, N.Y.

N.B.—Subscriptions received by R. S. Patterson, Post's Secretary for the Counties of Peterboro' & Victoria, where specimen Engravings and Art Journal can be seen.

JUDSON'S MOUNTAIN HERB WORM TEA.

Herbs, Barks and Roots
TERMED
Poisonous Minerals and Drugs.

MOTHERS TAKE HEED!

Do you when observing the uneasy actions of your children, consider that it may be more than a mere Cholic that afflicts them? In your next visit to the store of the little noble ox's magazine in WORMS, and should be of one mind in

HEADS OF FAMILIES

Do not let your children suffer, when we present you to

JUDSON'S WORM TEA
A SAFE AND PLEASANT CURE FOR WORMS

How much better and safer would it be to have it always in the house. A little delay when a child is taken ill may often be the cause of its death, while active without delay, and giving the MOUNTAIN HERB TEA, keeps healthy, you will not only save the child's life and tedious illness, and yourself much anxiety, but also feel happier in knowing that you have done your duty, and punishment saved its life.

This medicine is combined purely of

HERBS AND ROOTS

NOT A PARTICLE OF
Calomel or Mineral
IS USED IN IT.

No more Sickly Vermifuges will be used by those who once use this Tea. The only active principle in other Vermifuges and Worm Killers is MERCURY.

GIVE NO POISON
TO YOUR CHILDREN.

Use this Simple, Safe, Vegetable Medicine. This Worm Tea was discovered in an unusual way among the Wilds of Northern Michigan—a full account of it you will find in our Pamphlet. Ask for the "Secret of Pale Alexander," of the Agent, and when you have read it, send it to your neighbors, thereby may also know of and be cured by the GREAT REMEDY!

"JUDSON'S
Mountain Herb Pills.

Agent, we present you with a portrait likeness of Tuscor, a chief of a tribe of the strange Ashee Nation, that some years ago we visited and found a settlement and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis from the agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. It was while over the Rocky Mountains in the Rocky Mountain wild of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to compile a wholesome of bile. The action of the heart is quickened, and on the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which you a day drank, in a few hours the whole course of the stream becomes discolored and disordered. As quickly does impure blood Ruin the whole system. Then which can be the safest, the most economical, and wisest course to adopt? Is it to keep the blood pure, and thus prevent disease, or to wait till you are sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure the complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung disease, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. That it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is keeping up the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Inflammation, Rheumatism, Liver Complaints, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, or Tic Doloureux, Dimness of Vision, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Ringworm, Fever Sores, Scurvy, Humors, and all Scrofulous Complaints.

These Pills, by thoroughly purging the digestive canal, relieve the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels, and through these the Blood, and thus expel the diseases from the system. Hence they cure Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Jaundice, Dropsy, Erysipelas, Scurvy, Ulcers, Dysentery, Gout, Neuralgia, Dimness of Vision, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Scald Head, Ringworm, Fever Sores, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Humors, and all Scrofulous Complaints. Their sugar-coating renders them pleasant to take, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five Boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages have lent their names to certify the public to the wonderful efficacy of these Pills in the cure of all the complaints for which they are recommended. Their agency in the cure of these is truly marvellous. The antidote to disease is contained in them. They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service on this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIVE AND EFFUSIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud, and constitutions kept, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruption, if not relieved in time through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting though the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even when no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, by cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because the preparations pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to the guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

INFORMATION WANTED.
A DAUGHTER wishes to learn the present whereabouts of her mother, whom she has not seen for the last thirty-five years. Her maiden name was Polly Cook; her first husband's name was Warren Stone. It is said she married in 1809, a person named De Lacy, who was at that time engaged in some way in the manufacture of silk, in some part of Upper Canada. Any information respecting her will be gratefully received by addressing the subscriber, at 55 Frank Street, Rochester, N. Y.—Canadian papers will confer a favour upon one who has long been deprived of a mother's affections, by giving the above an insertion, entire or in part.

AMERICAN ARISTOCRACY.

FROM THE POPULAR POEM OF "MISS MCBRIDE."

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest one is pride of birth,
Among our "fierce democracy!"
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save from sneers—
Not even a couple of rotten peers—
A thing for laughter, sneers and jeers,
Is American aristocracy!

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you can't ascend
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed at the further end
By some plebeian vocation!
Or worse than that your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine
That plagued some unworthy relation.

Because you flourish in wordly affairs,
Don't be haughty and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station!
Don't be proud and turn up your nose
At poorer people in plainer clothes, [pose,
But learn—for the sake of your mind's repose
That wealth's a bubble that comes and goes
And that all proud flesh, wherever it grows
Is subject to irritation.

WHAT CLAIMS AMERICA HAS ON CANADIAN SYMPATHY.

When we are told that it is our duty to sympathize with the Northern cause, as that of freedom against slavery, we must reject the call, as not believing the grounds on which it is based. If we did, they should have our honest, earnest sympathy. We utterly detest and abhor slavery. We do not believe in its necessity—the example of Barbadoes and other West India islands proving that free black labor can be made entirely effective for tropical agriculture.—But there is every reason to believe that the majority of the people of the Northern States do not agree with us upon this point. It is manifest they have no such horror of the "institution," no such sympathy with the African race as we have. In many of the States the colored people are denied civil rights; in all they are treated with the most humiliating marks of social inferiority. Canada and Britain give them equal civil and political rights, and literate negroes are made companions of peers of the realm. We are honest in this; we make no false pretences; but the people of the Northern States with the exception of an almost insignificant minority, are not prepared to do as we have done. They want the profits derived from slave grown cotton; they really have no love for, or sympathy with the black man. Even the present Republican President of the United States once indignantly repudiated any design to grant the franchise to negroes in his own free state as it were a stigma. To enlist our sympathy, we ask some sign that the people of the North are not fighting for a slavery-protecting constitution, but for such a reform of it as will enable them to deal effectively with slavery. In that case they would not lack whole regiments of volunteers from British America, or the "God speed ye" of its three millions of inhabitants. We cannot regard as a beneficent institution a government that throws its protecting ægis over the master in his demand for the forced labor of the slave, leaving it in his power to force him into a separation from his wife and children and into adultery with another woman; which robs the negro in so vast a domain, of all social status, all inviolable family ties. it is a matter of utter indifference to us whether this infamy is perpetrated under the old constitution, for which the Northern troops are fighting under Lincoln and Scott, or the new one, for which the Southerners are doing battle under Jefferson Davis and Beauregard. In another way an issue might have been raised which might have warmed our sympathies. Had the North demanded, in a convention called for the purpose, the power to abolish slavery, offering compensation, and been refused, and then themselves, decreed the separation,—that had been a sacrifice on the altar of liberty at which all freemen would have rejoiced, and we most heartily who are of the same lineage The dignity of our race had thus been vindicated in its proud self-reliance worthily maintained. Had the Northmen said "this slavery of yours is a stigma and reproach on us all which we have borne for years; we will bear it no longer; give it up, or we will separate from you," then there would have been indeed a cause for pride in our cousins, and the heartiest sympathy with so genuine a love for liberty. They have warned the South that they sacrifice most by the separation, that trade must go on, much as before, to the profit of the North, while the South must submit to heavier burthens of taxation than heretofore; that the maintainance of their separate Confederate Government, their army and navy, their post-office, and other public institutions, must press very heavily upon them. The North say they have been taxed for the benefit of the South, especially for postal service. Would it not have been more manly—it would at least have been more comprehensible to us—to have thrust out these slaveholding communities from the benefit of the Union, and so relieved themselves of a dishonor? Instead of this, they hug the disgrace to their bosoms; nay, they fight for the dishonor of cherishing it, because it is profitable and ministers to their national vanity. They love grandeur more than honor, and hope for more dignity from the breadth of their territory than from sacrifices made for the sake of principle. They abuse the slaveholders and yet compel themselves to return their slaves to bondage, esteeming it the highest mark of unsullied honor to swear obedience to a constitution which commanded them to do so! And yet, forsooth, we are told we should sympathize with their cause as the cause of liberty on this continent. It is false. That cause is in our keeping, not theirs. Of all men on this continent, the people of Canada alone are truly freemen. A small community, we yet make all men free and equal before the law, black and white and red, except that the red man is treated with greater tenderness than white or black. We dare be a small community and be true to the principles of British freedom. Our neighbors seem too cowardly to dare as much. Before Canadians must consent to swear allegiance to a constitution which forced them into the position of slave catchers they would fight for the freedom of their country and its safety from such pollution, man by man, defending each inch of land they loved so well. They would consent to no compromise, and soil their hands with no dirty bargains in a cause like this. They set no eagles soaring up towards Heaven with pinions smeared with the black man's blood; they sprinkle no pompous platitudes about freedom and then give aid and comfort to the oppressor, piling needless and blasphemous oath on oath to prove to the world how willing they are to do so. We ask for no man's sympathy and we fear no people's frown. The slave touches our shores and he is free. We are ready to defend his liberties against the world. No power has an arm long enough and strong enough to take him back again.—The negroe makes his home among us and he is admitted to equal political privileges with the white man. We are proud of these things, and the pride is an honest one. If the Northern States were fighting for such a position as this, we should hail them brothers. But we see no sign of such a purpose. We see much swearing of fealty to the constitution, much bluster and rhodomontade about the union, much swagger about the power of the North, much defiance and insult of Britain. We have no sympathy—we can have none with any of these things. If the sentiment of liberty professed by our neighbors be not all fustian, they would find a truer honor and prouder distinction in being rid of the constitutional obligations which make them sentinels and constables of the slave power, as they are now, than in a re-conquest of the slave-holding states. If we err not our correspondent himself believed this once, and would believe it now, were he not so heated with the passion of the contest as to cease to see clearly and reason logically. We do not want a slave insurrection. That were a crime against civilization and humanity. But we do want an honest profession of anti-slavery faith and some indication that our neighbors mean to make thorough work. That end can only be attained by a straightforward consolidation of the States, by an increase of the constitutional authority of the Federal Government, so as to reach slavery everywhere, a centralization of power quite inconsistent with fine-spun Democratic theories. To us it seems quite clear that they have now to choose between their old Democratic decentralization of power, coupled with a continued recognition of slavery, and a stronger form of government, sufficiently to reach and destroy the evil.

THE AMERICAN WAR AND CANADIAN SYMPATHY.

The Montreal Gazette discusses this subject at great length and concludes by summing up its arguments, why Canada cannot sympathize with the North in the four following propositions:

1. A war for the Union and Constitution cannot be an anti-slavery war, and therefore cannot claim our sympathy, to which the North is panderer to slavery has no more title than the southern slave-owner.

2. A war for the Union, with a changed Constitution, which would give the North power to deal with slavery everywhere, as a national stain and curse, would arouse our heartiest sympathy; but we find no leader of the people prepared even now, when anger against the South is hottest—to urge that such a course should be pursued.

3. A war for the Constitution to be followed by an abandonment of the Union with the Southern States, is a wicked, useless war, since the Secessionists have no desire to impose any new or changed obligations on the Northern States.

4. The war is in any case an infringement of the fundamental principle of popular self-government, since, if it succeed, it will impose on the people occupying more than one-half of the territory of the Union, a government not "deriving its powers from the consent of the governed," but from the brute force of an army.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

PART II.

3. Indulgence in intoxicating drinks is uncharitable. It is inconsistent with love for our neighbor, and a due regard for his temporal and eternal welfare. We know that millions of gallons of intoxicating drinks are consumed annually in Great Britain and the United States, and that the cost of liquors imported, the value of grain destroyed, capital invested, and labour expended, amounts to millions of dollars. We know that by its effects idleness, recklessness, sickness and death are sown broadcast on society, and that our Jails, Hospitals, and Lunatic Asylums, owe to it a large proportion of their inmates, and that thousands every year enter no untimely grave under the curse, "No drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God." These are acknowledged facts. Now, if it can be shown that our indulgence has any influence in perpetuating the evil, or that our abstinence would at all limit or weaken its influence, would it not be our duty to abstain? It is not too much to say that if all professors of religion would bana themselves against the drinking customs of our day, that good to a large extent would be the result; nor is it too much to say also that the countenance given by professed Christians to the liquor traffic has done to society an incalculable amount of injury. No wonder it is that liquor making, &c., are not disreputable. Manifestly because countenanced by many respectable for social position and moral character. Methinks I hear a keeper of a Gin Palace say, "What! denounce my shop as a nuisance, as a pernicious establishment? Why, there is Mr. A., a zealous Methodist, who prides himself in being a disciple of the good John Wesley; and Deacon B., an exemplary Baptist, who almost worships the names of England's puritans and non-conformists; not to speak of C., a regular Presbyterian, and E., an Old School Covenanter, to whom the memory of Scotland's Covenanters martyrs are dear; they all patronize me. And there is Judge B., a truly religious gentleman, why he gave me an order for 50 bottles of wine before his last party. No! while I have the custom of the most religious and respectable men in the community, my establishment shall not be denounced in such terms." There is not a community where the Temperance cause is in its first beginning was not met by such opposition as this; and there are many where, to this day, you hear just such arguments in the mouths of indignant tuesellers. And so Christians interpose their influence to sanction the traffic, and neutralize the efforts of those who oppose it; and they who do so share in the guilt of those engaged in it.

4. Total Abstinence from intoxicating drinks is encouraged and commended in the Scriptures. The Nazarites were forbidden to drink wine, or strong drink, or eat moist grapes or dried, during the period of their separation. This cannot have been simply an ascetic prohibition; for rigid austerity formed no part of their discipline, and no restraint seems to have been laid on other bodily gratifications. There must be some reason why this particular indulgence was forbidden. We must regard it as establishing in the Nazarites a perpetual testimony against luxurious indulgence, and a fact established that Total Abstinence was consistent with the highest physical health and enjoyment.

The case of the Rechabites merits particular attention. The prophet Jeremiah was commanded to offer them wine; they refused to take it, assigning as a reason that Jonadab, their father, had commanded them not to use it. The prophet then draws a contrast between the obedience of the Rechabites to their ancestors and the rebellion of his countrymen against their heavenly Father, and pronounced a singular blessing on the Rechabites for their obedience. Jonadab, their father, saw the ruinous effects of intemperance around him, and instituted the rule of Total Abstinence—formed his posterity into a Temperance Society—and his wisdom in doing so is here vindicated, and they are blessed for their adherence to it.

Again, under the Old Testament Economy the priests were forbidden to drink wine or strong drink, during the period of their ministrations, that they might always have the clearness of judgment necessary for expounding the law, and officiating in the solemn services of the tabernacle. In Proverbs the same restriction is enjoined [illegible] it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink, lest they drink and forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." Now, if it is unwise and sinful for those who are in responsible situations to drink stimulating liquors, it is unwise in any one. Who can afford to have his mental perceptions and the operations of his judgment interfered with. No man who has any responsibilities resting upon him, who has any duties, can afford to indulge in intoxicating drinks.

Total Abstinence from all that will intoxicate is lawful, easy, safe, charitable, and countenanced in the Scriptures. The agonies of heart-broken mothers and wives worse than widowed, because married to husbands worse than dead, then love for their own children, their regard for weak brethren and for their own safety, are consideration which should recommend the cause of Temperance to every man and woman who feels an interest in the temporal and spiritual welfare of the whole family of Man.

THE SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

MR. EDITOR:—I beg of you this one more opportunity of stating my views in regard to the Schools of Scotland, which I am sufficiently honest to confess my respect for, in the face of so many despisers of that fountain of my country's fame. It is true that many imperfections cover it, and to some extent mar its limpid waters, which however decried in consequence by many, both natives and foreigners, have as yet found no equal on this globe. It is also true that Scotchmen, with all their natural caution, are but too apt in the present day to abandon for something new whatever is old, however well it may have worked previously. They are so proud as to feel ashamed to own anything they regard as their own which falls short of perfection, and thus often destroy what they ought to admire. One very glaring imperfection of the present School System in Scotland is the multiplication of Denominational Schools,—owing to the religious quarrels among the people, in which we see plainly the sad folly of such quarrels, in a worldly point of view. Now of these quarrels I am not going to say a word, excepting as they bear upon the Schools. Looking at their effects upon these, we see in every little village, or district, two or more Schools, all claiming aid from Government, and trying by means of local and political influence to draw a, largely on the public purse as possible, whether as third part salary to the teachers half pay for the scholars, and for buildings, books and furniture, or whole pay for pupil teachers, &c. Now "this is a crying evil, a public waste, a moral nuisance." So says the Journal of Education, and I admit it. But how is it to be remedied? By a mongrel Samaritan system like the Irish or the Canadian, which under a pretence of greater liberality and Catholicity, throws Christianity overboard, and substitutes in its stead a tolerant Polytheism of "Jehovah and all the gods"? Is that the result desired by the strict dissenters of Scotland who could not submit to tolerate, even under an allowed protest, any connection with what they regard as an ungodly Civil Government? And is the descendant and the heir of the spiritually-minded Covenanter, who gloried in mortifying the earthiest of this world's employments by the reading of the Word and prayer, at last to sink down into the degraded infidel who will not own God and His Word, in the holiest of all parental duties, the upraising of his children? I know the true cause, and so do all who read this, I suppose; but God forbid that such an open scope should be allowed to its operation as the once God-fearing Scotland! And for what are we urged to sacrifice our Holy Religion, the guide and guard of the young, the hope and consolation of the aged?—A mere dispute about the election and support of Ministers! Is there no Scripture Rule on these subjects? If there is not, then all plans are mere matters of expediency, and the best plan is that which works best. And if there is a Scripture rule, as probably there is, cannot our learned men who can trace the path of the wandering comet through all its dark and dreary way for five or six hundred years, who can explore the bowels of the earth and trace the history of its massy hills, who can read as if written yesterday, the mystic symbols of Egypt and Babel,—cannot some of our learned men tell us from plain Scriptures what that rule is? And if Scripture fails where information is so necessary, cannot some rule be deduced from common sense, so that the godly people of Scotland may not need to throw away the precious jewel of a Christian education for their children by the aid of the Bible, and Bible-loving teachers, and substitute a paste gem in place of it, merely because they cannot agree about the color of the binding.—Oh! what infatuation possesses our people, that they will thus through hatred of each other, allow the infidel and the hypocrite thus openly to steal the inheritance of our fathers—a Bible-school for our children!

With many thanks for your indulgence, I remain, Mr. Editor, yours truly,

AN OLD PAROCHIAL SCHOOL-MASTER OF SCOTLAND.

A DOG'S REVENGE.

The writer of this notice, many years ago possessed a noble Labrador dog, called "Tiger," immaculate in breed and unmatched in endowments. We could tell stories of him—and vouch for them too—which would have made Pyrrho himself cease to doubt. He ran by the side of a stage coach from Newcastle to Edinburgh—120 miles—and when taken up about half way by the John, out of compassion, jumped down again in disdain, and alternately chased the birds through the fields, and leaped with nothing pertinacity at the horses [illegible] on another occasion he swam across the Queens ferry after the mail-boat in which it was impossible to confine him, and in the dead of night, and overtook the coach with a triumphant yell of delight after it had got a-head of him by several miles. But these were mere physical feats. Let us cite a case of his intellectual qualities. When at Newcastle-on-Tyne a gentleman of the name of Huntly a friend and visitor of his master's once set a bull-terrier on him. Tiger was valiant, out no match for his trained opponent, and came off second best. But he stomached his defeat, and waited his time. Some months after he remained with his master to Edinburgh. One day when he was under the table, as was his wont, Huntly came in, who had just arrived to pay a visit. Tiger at once recognised him, he then rushed out, ruffled up his back, growled, showed his teeth, and stood defiant and rebuked and ordered down by his master. In a few days Huntly came again, and said—"Your dog alarms me. Every morning when I go out I find him opposite my steps; he growls significantly, and goes away slowly, looking at me over his shoulder. I think he means mischief." A week more elapsed, when one morning the writer, being busily engaged in correcting some printer's proofs, heard suddenly a noise upon the stairs outside the door of his sitting room followed by a growl, a short struggle, and a shriek. He ran hastily to open the door, when Tiger sneaked in and scuttled under the sofa, his usual place of retreat when he had offended.—Huntly followed, pale and terrific, with his trousers torn, and blood flowing from a fleshy part of his person. The dog had seized him suddenly and taken his reverge. He was dragged out and severely punished which he bore with the silent philosophy of a stoic. But from that moment, his honor being satisfied, and his debt paid over, he ever received Huntly with a wag of the tail and a deposit on to lick his hand.—Dublin University Magazine.

HAVE YOU LOST SUCH A THING AS A FINGER.

"You don't happen to have lost such a thing as a finger?" said a certain boy in the employment of the Zoological Society, arriving at the house of a gentleman to whom he had been sent to make the above remarkable inquiry. The gentleman's hand was bound up, and he made answer to the boy: "Yes, I have, and you may go back to your master and tell him that if he has found it he may put it in spirits, and keep it as a warning to others not to act as foolish as I have done." "I had observed the gentleman often enough," said the superintendant describing the circumstance to the four travellers who had placed themselves under his guidance. "I had observed him, and had often warned him that to play with the bears, as he was in the habit of doing when he came here, was very dangerous; for he would put his hand in the cage and tease them and play with them as if they were tomcats. One day I came to the cage here, and saw laying just outside it a human finger, with the tendon hanging to it in a long strip. "It's that gentleman's finger," I said, "and he's gone away without saying anything, for he used always to make light of my warnings and would tell me that to know all about it, and was not afraid a bit. And the finger was his sure enough." This curious case was not an isolated one. On another occasion, a finger, with the stretched tendon hanging to it in the same way, was found outside the den of the wolves. People will have the temerity to run these foolish risks, and then go away ashamed, even in the midst of their pain, to own what their rashness has ended in.

SCOTCH SHEEP DOG.

I certainly witnessed some specimens of canine sheperding that were staggering.—For example, in one of these flocks of thousands, where the shepherd called his sheep by their own names and knew their individual faces, and where he walked before his flock in a way that must forcibly realised the Scripture scenes of shepherd life, he would say to his dog, go into the flock and fetch out so-and-so, mentioning many names. Whereupon the dog would dart into the flock, and single out here one, and there another, until he had got together a certain number of sheep. Of course I had to believe that they were the very sheep designated by the shepherd; but at any rate it was curious that the dog should fetch them from various parts of the flock. What the shepherd wished me to believe was, that his dog knew the names and faces of the sheep as well as he did, but he told me that only two of his dogs would do this. Whether or no he was humbugging me (I forget what is the equivalent word in Tartan-land) I must leave the reader to decide.—Cuthbert Bede's Glenoreggan.

GETTING OLD.

Did you ever consult the mirror to ascertain whether you are getting old—to detect, if you could, a pair of feet, and a crow's at that, at the corners of your eyes—to see if that grey hair somebody charged you with having yesterday was a thing but a reflection of the light, and not so much whiter than the ace of spades after all?—But the mirror is nothing to go to for information; it reflects to very little purpose. If you would know what age is doing for you, look upon the face of a friend you have not seen in ten years, and the story is as plain as a pike staff! There is something or other about him you cannot quite understand; his features are a little sharper, the expression of his eyes a little colder, of his brow a little harder, of his mouth a little firmer. To be sure his laugh hasn't gone, but then a tooth or two has. He is the same, yet not the same, but yet somewhat harder and rougher, and not so much of him as of old. But the strangest of all is his hand. That has grown old faster than his face. How soft and white it used to be, you remember, and plump as a partridge. There was a tracery of blue veins upon the back of it, and you and he used to read each other's fortunes and life journeys in the meandering currents that flowed on so quietly [illegible] like a crow now, as if he used it a digging; then it is as brown as October; the full, rounded muscle has shrunk away from the veins, and they stand out like ridges in a fallow. Veins, indeed, they look like a handful of whipcord. There is a knotty look and a knotty feel about the joints, as if you were grasping a handful of walnuts. Then, again, his hair has grown wiry, or bristly, or gray, or thin, or something that it was not, for the truth is it is growing upon an old head. You think as you look at him, "is it possible," and he keeps you company with his wonder "how it can be," and in that look you have seen yourself as he sees you, as they all see you, as you are.

A TIMELY REPROOF.

Humor and sharp wit are never put to better use than in answering a fool according to his folly, and we could wish that reproofs like the following were more frequent:

Some five or six years ago, in one of the trains of cars running between Newark and Jersey City, New Jersey, there was a young naval officer, who was constantly intermingling his conversation with the most profane oaths. A young lady was so situated that she could not but hear every time he swore. At first she bore it with perfect equanimity; then, as it continued, and rather increased in the shocking character of his imprecations, she began to grow fidgety, and her eyes flashed. We knew a bolt would soon be shot, and that it would strike him. It came directly.

"Sir, can you converse in the Hebrew tongue?"

"Yes," was the answer, in a half unconscious, but slightly sneering tone.

"Then," was the reply, "if you wish to swear any more, you would greatly oblige me, and probably the rest of the passengers also, if you would do it in Hebrew."

I watched him. It had bit. His colour came and went—now red, now white. He looked at the young lady, then at his boots, then at the ceiling of the cars; but he did not swear any more, either in Hebrew or English, and he probably remembered that young lady.

PROGRESS OF GASPE.

A correspondent of the Canadien communicates some interesting details relative to Gaspe. It appears, that, within the last three months, something over 500 vessels have visited Gaspe Basin while 44,676 acres of land have been sold in the district, since the establishment of the Free Port. Over 400 Norwegian emigrants have arrived in the course of the season, direct from Norway, and have settled in different localities throughout the country. Another vessel is expected to arrive this autumn with two hundred settlers. Several new and extensive wharves are in course of construction at the Basin, while a number of others have been projected. Houses and stores are being erected everywhere, thus giving the most satisfactory and convincing evidence of progress and prosperity. The writer also states that the lead mine of the country has become the property of a number of Norwegians, one of whom was formerly employed in the silver mines of Kongsberg. Their researches have been extremely successful; quite a number of rich veins of lead ore have been discovered; and there is every indication of a valuable deposit of the metal.—Traces of copper are numerous and seem to indicate that it may be found in considerable quantities. The oil wells are also the scene of active operations, and works of considerable magnitude are now progressing with a view to facilitate the working of this great natural wealth.

THE PRINCE IN PRISON.

During the visit of Prince Napoleon to Philadelphia, he inspected the United States Mint and the Eastern Penitentiary. Among others he made a call at the cell of the great forger, Col. James Buchanan Cross, when the following scene was enacted:—The Prince didn't shake hands with the felon and the latter was too much of a philosopher to expect it. The Colonel offered the visitors seats upon his bed, which they accepted. He then assured the Prince that he knew him very well, and had seen him in Paris. More than this, he proved it by relating incidents which caused the Prince to open wide his rather lazy eyes. To cut a long story short, the Col. verified, what we always doubted, that he had been in the Crimean army, had witnessed the battle of Solferino, and had obtained the entree of the most exclusive salons of the Parisian capital. The Prince was so much interested that he translated Cross's stories to his friends who spoke no English. When the Prince asked the swindler whether he was travelling on business or pleasure, he said with sublime hauteur, "For pleasure, sir." More than this, he gave the names of two honored Americans who, not knowing his true character, had introduced him to society.—American Paper.

STAGNATION OF TRADE IN THE STATES.

Extract from a letter from a gentleman in New York to a gentleman in Hamilton:

"I regularly send you papers which shew you what a state we are in. What is going to become of us I see not, all are mad—stark staring mad—and our newspapers ought to be burned up, especially such as the Herald, who, while we are striving to arrange our own evils, is constantly urging on a war with England, but the paper has no weight here, and is only taken for its generally correct information; few ever look at the editorials.

"It was quite as well, after all, that—did not persevere to get a place here, for nearly every house has gone to the wall; a few only stand, and these have little or nothing to do. We (a large wholesale hardware house) are positively doing nothing, and although paid, if we do not have a change soon I cannot expect our people to go on, at all events paying present salaries when almost every one has discharged or reduced the number of his employees."

ANECDOTE OF GARIBALDI.

I HAVE just read an anecdote containing a fine trait of Garibaldi in a Genoese Journal. A Corsican vessel, of 130 tons, sailed from Corsica to load charcoal in the Bay of Arzachena. It became surprised by bad weather in front of Caprera. General Garibaldi saw the poor vessel, commanded by the captain, Toxin Baptiste Nirolin, appear greatly just about being lost. The general did not hesitate a minute. He got into a boat, boarded the vessel seized the rudder after some little conversation with the captain, and brought his knowledge of the coast to the vessel. The difficult point was at last happily rounded. The delighted captain took out his purse, and offered the volunteer pilot who had saved him, all the money he choose to accept. The general declined, saying, "I thank you all the same mon brave; yonder is Arzachena; follow your course; you have no more danger to fear." "But," said the captain, "take at least some tobacco, some wine, some brandy or some rum." "Thanks, captain for your offer; but I only drink water, and I only smoke when I have nothing to do." "But who are you then?" asked the captain, "a seaman who will not take either pay or rum?" "Bon voyage," rejoined Garibaldi, who had already got into his boat. The captain of the vessel arrived very much amazed at Maddalena, and narrated his adventure to the seamen of Alexandre Dumas' Emma, which happened to be there awaiting the orders of Garibaldi. The sailors asked for a description of the savior of the vessel. "Dame! a long fair beard," said the captain, "a red shirt, old worn trousers, a shoutched hat, great shoes, with nails in them, a handkerchief twisted round his neck. "Parblu," said one, "why man, it was the General!" "What general are you talking of?" "Why, who but Garibaldi." The captain remained fixed like the statue of the commander. Two days before, Menotti, son of Garibaldi saved a Neapolitan schooner in distress.

VACCINATION.—The Act 24 Vic., cap. 24, providing for the more general adoption of the practice of vaccination, received the Royal assent on the 18th of May last.—The second section requires that "from and after the passing of this Act," the several Cities in the Province, and the Town of Sherbrook, shall contract with some legally qualified and competent medical practitioner or practitioners, for the period of one year, and so from year to year as such contract may expire, for the vaccination at the expense of the city of all poor persons, and, at their own expense, of all persons resident in such city, who may come to such medical practitioner or practitioners for that purpose; and the third section enacts that within three months after the passing of this Act, the Council of such such City shall appoint a convenient place in each Ward of such City for the performance, a, once in each month, of such vaccination &c.

SIDNEY SMITH'S FABRICATIONS.

POST-OFFICE FINANCES!

Mr Sidney Smith is the most unblushing falsifier that ever sought the votes of a Canadian constituency. He sticks at nothing to accomplish his momentary end. He manufactures lies by wholesale, and strives to gain credence for them from his auditors by the sheer audacity with which he utters them. The lies he uttered at the Ministerial dinners last winter were something astounding—but his efforts in the Trent Division fairly outstrip them. At a public meeting held in Peterboro a few days since, he had actually the audacity to make this statement:

"When I entered office in 1858, there "was an annual deficiency in the Post Office "accounts of $192,926. In 1860 there was "a surplus of no less than $16,202! Is "there no evidence here of an economical "administration of the affairs of that department?"

Every word of this is deliberately false. Mr. Sidney Smith knew it was false when he uttered it. He knew that the Public Accounts would prove its falsity; but he also knew that few if any of his hearers would have the public Accounts to refer to, and that if they had, the confused manner in which they are purposely printed would make it difficult for them on the moment to expose his untruth. Not only is it totally untrue that the Postal Department showed a surplus in 1860 of $16,202 or any other sum, but the fact is that there was the enormous deficit in that year of $401,513! Not only is it grossly false that Mr. Smith has achieved any reduction of the annual postal drain from the public chest, but the fact is that every new year he has been in office has shown a heavy increase on the deficit of the previous year!!

If the reader will turn with us to page 21 of the Public Accounts for 1860, he will find there given what purports to be a "Statement of the Revenue derived from "the Post Office Department, and of the "expenses of management for the year end- "ed 30th September, 1860." This statement shows that the Postal Revenue for the year was.....$658,051 92
And the expenditure..... 645,249 31

Leaving a surplus of.....$12,802 61

But only a slight knowledge of the mode of cooking the public accounts is necessary to satisfy the enquirer that this return is not a true statement of the disbursements of the Department, but a mere concoction, from which large items of expenditure have been omitted.

And, first, the reader will observe that among the items of revenue there is one reading thus:—"Legislative and Depart- "mental Franks per order in Council, "$64 000." The explanation of this item is as follows: Before Mr. Smith became Postmaster General, the letters and papers of the members of the Legislature and Government went free; no account was kept of the postage, and no charge made for the work; but no sooner was Mr Smith installed in office than, to create a fictitious appearance of increased revenue from his Department, he assumed the value of the public mail matter to be $64,000 a year, and every year since he has drawn that sum from the Public Chest! Now whether the old or the new system was the best—whether it was better to carry the public mails and make no charge for the work, or to carry them and value the cost at $64,000 a year—we shall not now discuss. But this is certain that the public mails were carried by the Department before Mr. Smith took the office precisely in the same manner as they have been since; and it is therefore the sheerest humbug in Mr Smith to claim that the Revenue of the Department has been increased by him $64,000 a year, simply because he charged the country that sum for the work while his predecessor made no charge for it. The whole difference was that the one got the money from the public chest as a supply to make good the deficiency on the year's transactions, while the other got it from the chest as compensation for the franking privilege. To make the comparison between 1857 and 1860 that Mr Smith challenged at Peterborough, this entry of $64,000 must therefore of course be struck out.

But this is not all. Mr. Sidney Smith devised another scheme of a similar kind for giving a fictitious appearence of economy to his management of the Department. Before Mr. Smith's incumbency, all the salaries of the Post Office Department were paid from the funds of the Department, with the one exception, that of the Postmaster General's salary. But no sooner was Mr Smith installed than he got a large portion of the expense of the Department transferred to the General Government, and it has been paid ever since under the head of "Civil Service." If the reader will turn to page 57 of the Public Accounts for 1860, he will find under the head "Postmaster General's Department"—the large sum of $38,155 extracted in this surreptitious manner from the pockets of the public. A rare style of electioneering is this of Mr. Sidney Smith! His predecessor drew the money from the public chest—paid it to his clerks and honestly set it down as an expenditure of the Post Office Department; Mr Sidney Smith draws the money also from the Public Chest and paid it away precisely as his predecessor did, but he sets it down under the head of "Civil Service" expenditure, omits it entirely from the Post Office accounts—and then boasts of the great reductions which he has accomplished in the Postal expenditure!!

And this is not all. Will the reader turn with us to pages 117 and 118 of the Public Accounts of the same year—1860, and he will there find set down under the head of "Governmental Buildings;" the following items:—

Post-Office, Quebec....	$30,147 39
Post-Office, Montreal...	2,767 98
Post-Office, London....	5,372 46
	$38,557 83

The money thus expended came direct from the Public Chest, and not through the Post Office Department; but it is as clearly a charge for the maintenance of the Department as any portion of the acknowledged expenditure, and it is the merest fudge of Mr. Sidney Smith to strike out this large sum from his accounts, and then prate about his surplus revenue!

Nor is this all. On page 146 of the Public Accounts for the same year—1860, under the suspicious head of "Miscellaneous," are found these items:—

"F. Baby, for the Gulf Postal Service in 1859.....	$5,000
"Red River Mail Service.....	4,205
	$9,205

These payments were made direct from the public chest—they are stuck out of sight with a heap of other queer miscellaneous items—they are carefully excluded from the Post Office accounts—and then Mr. Sidney Smith boasts that his predecessor had a deficit of $192,926, but that he, Sidney Smith, achieved a surplus of $16,202!!

But the shameless fraud attempted to be played off on the public is still better exemplified by three other items under this same title of "Miscellaneous," on page 147.—They run thus:—

"Hon. J. Ross—for expenses to England, in connection with Postal subsidies.....	$1,216 67
"Hon. Sidney Smith—for ditto and the Continent during the winter of 1859.....	3,808 38
"Hon. Sidney Smith—for ditto, ditto, summer of 1860.....	3,376 71

Total travelling expenses...$8,401 76

A very pretty little bill certainly for a couple of summer jaunts! And how came so direct a Post Office charge to be omitted from the Post Office accounts? Why simply to enable Mr. Smith to blaze away before the electors of Peterboro', Lennox and Hastings, about his wonderful economy in the Post Office expenditure!

But by far the most serious part of the business is that in order to make out his pretended surplus on the transactions of 1860, Mr. Smith had to omit from his fraudulent statement of Receipts and Expenditures of the year the whole of the vast sum paid the Montreal Steamship Company for carrying the Mail bags across the Atlantic! Mr. Sidney Smith took care to credit himself with every penny of cash received for Ocean postage, but not one penny did he charge himself with of the money paid for doing the work! On page 131 of the Public Accounts of 1860, there will be found entered as paid "for the Weekly "Ocean Mail Service.....$200,000 00
"For Ocean Postage on British Canadian Mails.... 55,996 65
$255,996 63

In the same year, there appears as advance for mortgage on Ocean Steamers $301,619 98—but as this was a loan to be repaid in future years we do not include it in the Postal Expenditure of 1860.

Now then, let us make these corrections and see how the revenue and expenditure of the Post Office Department in 1860 really stood. The official return declared the expenditures of the year

To have been (page 21)...	$645,249 31
Departmental Salaries (page 57).....	38,155 00
Postoffice buildings (page 117)	38,357 83
Gulf and Red River Service (page 146).....	9,205 00
Travelling ex. (page 147)..	8,401 76
Ocean Postal Subsidy (page 131).....	255,996 63
Real expenditure, 1860....	$995,565 55
Official Return of revenue (page 21)	$658,051 92
Less public mails.	64,000 00
	$594,051 92
True deficit in 1860	$401,513 63

Now, what will the public think of Mr. Sidney Smith, who in the face of these startling facts has the effrontery to declare that there was a surplus on the year's transactions of $16,202! And what must be thought of a Government that deliberately and systematically so cooks the Public Accounts that this lying statement of Mr. Smith might easily have passed without detection! Surely for this one transaction, were there nothing more against him, Mr. Sidney Smith should be spurned from every poll in the Trent Division.

Aut not only was Mr. Smith's statement as to a surplus in 1860 untrue—his boast that he had exercised greater economy than his predecessor was equally false. Mr. Smith became Postmaster General in 1858 and not only was the deficit of that year greater than that of 1857 but the deficit increased yearly with every year Mr. Smith held the office. Here are the figures:—

	Revenue.	Expenditure.	Deficit.
1857	$463,861	$765,413	$301,551
1858	477,217	809 204	331,986
1859	514,692	872,733	358,041
1860	594,051	995,565	401,513

It will thus be seen that Mr. Sidney Smith during his short incumbency of three years, increased the expenses of the Department from $765,413 to the vast amount of $995,565! It will also be seen that the annual deficit when he entered the Department was but $301,551, and that in three short years he increased it to $401,513! And yet this man has the audacity to boast of his management of the Department, and his economy, and his surplus revenues!

That there may be no doubt left on the mind of any one as to the perfect accuracy of these figures, we publish the accounts of the Department for each of these four years in detail:—

LATEST from EUROPE,

ARRIVAL OF THE ARAGO.

Cape Race, August 30.

The steamship Arago from Havre via Southampton 21st inst., passed here to-day, and was boarded by the Press yacht.

The Ætna which broke her shaft when 700 miles on her voyage to New York, had arrived back at Queenstown.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Prince Alfred was received in Liverpool with great enthusiasm.

The King of Sweden had left England for home.

The Great Eastern was expected to take more troops to Canada.

The ship Sussex had arrived with £27,000 sterling, and the Marco Polo with £26,000.

Applications for discount at the Bank were moderate. Loans on stock exchange were offered at 3½. Foreign exchange was slightly higher.

American securities were unaltered.—Consols 70¾ a 79¾ for money and 91 for account.

Sugar and tea quiet. Coffee and tallow firm.

FRANCE.

The deficiency in the wheat crop was generally admitted.

ITALY.

The reactionists were everywhere beaten. Twenty-nine priests and three monks were arrested.

Garibaldi was expected at Naples on the 18th September, the anniversary of his entry into Naples. Grand fetes were preparing.

Cialdini reminds the Government that he only provisionally accepted the lieutenancy of Naples, but that he will not resign until the country is purged of brigands and a new Lieutenant shall be appointed.

Tranquility and perfect order prevail at Rome.

TURKEY.

Fuad Pacha is to be promoted in rank.

The Sultan continued to effect reforms.

The chief of the Hersegovina insurgents had requested the intercession of Russia for peace with the Turks.

Omar Pasha had approved of the proposed Russian and Austrian embassy at Constantinople.

The Russians had sustained another defeat from the Circassians.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

Successive disturbances had broken out at Kalidah, patriots were insulted, and a number of men surrounded the gaol and demanded the prisoners which had been taken, which was granted when the garrison assembled and threatened to fire on the people. Numbers were arrested.

HUNGARY.

The dissolution of the Hungarian Diet was considered certain within a few days.

An Imperial rescript was expected shortly.

ARRIVAL OF THE NORTH AMERICAN.

Father Point, Sept. 2.

The North American from Liverpool 22nd ultimo, and Londonderry 23rd, passed here at 3:30 this morning, with 189 passengers and $100,000 in specie.

Breadstuffs.—Market still downward tendency, with small sales. Wheat inactive and dull, and declined 2d. Corn flat and declined 6d. Provisions dull.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Queen and Royal family reached Queenstown, Ireland, via Holyhead on the night of the 21st inst. They were to land and proceed to Dublin the following morning.

Among the papers read at the meeting of the Social Science Congress at Dublin, was one by Mr. Baxley, M. P., from Manchester, entitled, "With cotton employment and food, without it famine and expatriation." He said the manufacturers expected to be able to command a supply of cotton to keep them working with tolerable regularity until the spring. The crop was growing in the Southern States, but the difficulty will be to obtain it. Certainly it will be short of past years. Mr. Baxely is an extensive spinner, and said that cotton is now laid down in his warehouse at 12¼ per cent in excess of the price paid to American planters; whereas to bring cotton from Bierout would cost 100 per cent on the price paid, owing to the difficulties of transportation.

Dr. McGowan, an American, said the statesmen of the country would hail with delight the efforts to relieve them from the monopoly of cotton. The matter of supply of the staple was further discussed, when Miss Sarah Redmond read a paper on American slavery and its influences on Great Britain.

M. Chevalier, the celebrated French free trader, then denounced the Morrill tariff as the child of disorder.

FRANCE.

The Emperor continued to remain at the Chalons Camp. Grand manœuvres had been prevented by the intense heat of the weather.

The Paris Bourse was firm and animated at the opening, but closed lower. Rentes quoted at 68f. 45c.

ITALY.

It was reported that the Maquis D'Evillamanna had been appointed Governor of Naples in place of the Marquis Daffito.

General Cialdini, in a speech to the Municipal Council of Naples, reiterated the policy of the King's Government, including the deliverance of Venice and the obtainment of Rome as the Capital of Italy. He expected all faction to cease, and that the people might be united.

The English squadron remained at Naples, and the French papers complain that the crews of the same are daily suffered to go on shore in detachments to drill.

AUSTRIA.

Count Haller arrived at Peath on the 21st of August, with an order for the dissolution of the Hungarian Diet, and would in his quality of Royal Commissioner dissolve the Diet on the 22nd of August.

The Lower House had held a special session to discuss its future course.

The new Diet was to be convened within six months.

It is stated that no manifesto will be issued to the people of the Austrian empire, neither will an internal message be addressed to the Council of the empire.

The Hungarian Chancellor will issue a circular explaining the situation of affairs.

It is asserted that M. Deak's policy will be one of measured prudence, but unflinchingly decisive.

INDIA.

The Bombay mail of July 28, arrived at Marseilles on the 21st August, and at London on the 23rd.

The news is of no particular importance, and has mostly been already telegraphed.

LATEST.

London, August 23.—The Times publishes Russell's correspondence to the 5th of August. The letter mainly referred to the demoralized and insubordinate state of the army, at the same time crediting McClellan with speedy reforms. He says the Southerners believe they will be safe if they hold out until October, and that at the end of the year the Northerners will be farther from their aim than ever.

The Times has another editorial on the financial difficulties of the American government. It says that the course pursued at Washington throws into the shade all borrowing of England.

The election for member of Parliament in South Lancashire has resulted in the choice of Charles Turner, Conservative. This is regarded as a Ministerial defeat.

The weather in England was rather variable and less favorable, but no injury was done to the crops. The harvest progresses finely.

The Commercial treaty between England and German Customs Union is being negotiated.

The Moniteur publishes a text of Convention between France and England, regulating the emigration of Indian laborers in the French colonies.

The Italian Minister of Marine has contracted with Mr. Webb, the New York shipbuilder, for two iron-cased frigates on the model of La Gloire.

The rupture between Austria and Hungary is regarded as complete. No new movement had taken place and no Imperial decree had been issued, but the dissolution of the Hungarian Diet was fully anticipated to be followed by a manifesto against the Hungarian pretensions.

HATS OFF!

AN INCIDENT IN MONTREAL.

A Montreal correspondent sends us the following:—

"An amusing incident occurred here the other day in this city, which at the time created quite an excitement. The band of the 47th Regiment had been 'discoursing sweet music' opposite the St. Lawrence Hall, and as is the custom, concluded with 'God Save the Queen.' No sooner was the National Anthem commenced than all heads were uncovered—no, I am wrong, not all—one hat still remained on the head of a free born American. He was one of those rugged, double-jointed individuals who might truthfully be described as "half horse half alligator.' There he stood, a man of elongated stature and ferocious countenance, defiance in his very attitude. The cry of 'hats off' arose from different parts of the crowd, but the unflinching Yankee still gazed, or rather glared around him with lowering brows and undaunted mien. Great indignation arose among the by-standers, and our independent friend, notwithstanding his warlike appearance, must inevitably have 'come to grief' had he not been taught a useful lesson and saved a drubbing in a manner which he little expected and probably could not appreciate. An officer of the 47th stepped forward, gently removed the offending beaver from the head of the fire-eater and immediately placed it in the hand of the owner with a polite bow. The effect was wonderful. The king of birds assumed the gentleness of the dove, and from that moment his meekness was exemplary. He very soon retreated to his private room in the hotel."

SHOOT THEM DOWN.

General McClenan's order to shoot down every Scotchman of the 79th regiment who objects to ill-treatment, or dares to remonstrate against being transferred to General Sickels' brigade, may accomplish more than its author dreamed of when he issued it. Taken in conjunction with other circumstances affecting regiments of foreigners now in the service of the States, it proves the folly of any man, not being a native American, in participating in the conflict. North and South are alike in this regard. They are willing that the fighting shall be done by foreign-born folk, and they evince a strong desire themselves to keep out of it as much as possible; but what thanks will the foreigners receive in the end? Think you they are cared for except as stop-gaps, who may be shot down without being missed? General Banks gave an anticipatory answer some time ago. General McClelland gives his now. And we hope that Scotchmen, Irishmen, and Englishmen will take note in time. Let them leave the Americans to do their own fighting, and the war will come to an end comparatively soon.

PEASE INTO COFFEE.

We are credibly informed that since last harvest not less than ten thousand bushels of pease have been shipped from this district to the adjoining States, to be converted into coffee! The composition, when finished, is half coffee, half pease, and is sold in packets as a genuine specimen of the fragrant bean. Large quantities are regularly sent from a manufactory on the other side of the lake to the commisariat of the Northern army. It is said to be difficult even for judges to detect the adulteration. Pease are at long remove from coffee, but they are nutritious, and as much cannot be affirmed of the most of adulterating ingredients.—The transformation of the Canadian article into the berry is not practised on this side, and we hope that no one, as the familiar story runs about greasing the horses' teeth will take the hint.—London News.

☞ Twelve thousand Cheshire cheeses were destroyed in the late great fire in London.

☞ It is reported in courtly circles that young Mr Paterson Bonaparte is about to marry a daughter of Prince Murat.

☞ Sir William and Lady Don have realised more than £3000 by their trip to Australia. They are to leave for England in October.

☞ The Austrain police have shut up twenty-seven coffee-houses, because they refuse to take in the official Verona Gazette.

☞ On a recent occasion, as the marriage ceremony was about to be performed in the church near Truro, when the clergyman desired the parties wishing to be married to rise up, a large number of ladies immediately rose.

THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.—It is said that the rebels are crossing the Potomac and advancing Northwards. Washington may yet be attacked by Beauregard. The appearances are now in favor of that movement.

☞ The Sentinella of Toulon states that, three evenings back, in the Rue des Savonnieres, in that town, a girl about seventeen years of age, after some angry words from her mother, threw herself out of a third floor window into the street. She fell on the pavement close to some persons who were sitting out to enjoy the fresh air. They hastened to take up what they supposed must be a dead body, but, owing to the young person's ample crinoline, which had acted as a parachute, she had received neither fracture nor wound, though she was rather severely bruised and greatly shaken.

☞ The reporters of the Dublin papers use extraordinary diligence in trying to ascertain how the Prince of Wales spends his time at the Curragh; but they complain that it is impossible to get accurate information of his Royal Highness' movements. The sum of all they can tell about him is that he minds his own business, and would be obliged if other people would let him alone, and mind theirs.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE

Trent Division.

GENTLEMEN,

The death of your late member requires your suffrages to fill the vacancy.

A number of the Electors from various parts of the Division having urged upon me the necessity of contesting the election in opposition to the Hon. Sidney Smith, Postmaster General, lately defeated for West Northumberland, I have consented to do so for the purpose of defeating him, unless you will consent to place your choice on some other person, in which case I shall be most happy to withdraw in his favor, and give him my support and influence.

Although personally unknown to many of the electors, yet I feel warranted in saying that my past parliamentary career is well known, and if elected I shall have no sectional views to carry out, for any one locality in preference to another, but in all cases be guided by the actual requirements of the whole people.

A BANKRUPT LAW.

I shall support a just and equitable Bankrupt Law for the benefit of Upper Canada Traders, as well as others, but not such a law as the government of which Mr. Smith is a member, were forced to withdraw during the last Session of Parliament.

UNIVERSITY REFORM

Will meet with my warmest support, and any Act which will tend to make the University, or our Colleges, and halls of learning more efficient, in giving the higher branches of Education to the youth of our noble country, will meet with a response from me on all occasions. It is not within my province to know what the government intend to do in reference to the question at issue. Judging from the past I have but little faith in their intentions.

LAW REFORM

I have always been in favor of, as my past votes will show. The lighter the costs can be made for the Debtor, the more easily he can pay them.

CLERGY RESERVE QUESTION.

I thought that this question had been set at rest, but it seems Mr. Smith has dug up a pretended fragment of the old bone, by dragging in the existence of the Rectories. Again, we find what was "the intention of the Government." They had an intention 7 years ago—they have kept it in abeyance ever since—how much longer will they find technical reasons for delay, it is impossible to say. I am favorable to an early settlement of this question.

FEDERATION OF THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

I believe instead of "taking warning by the defects of the Constitution of the United States," or instead of looking to Washington, we had better amend the defects in our own Constitution and Government, by applying those wholesome checks, which will for the future prevent the Government of which Mr. Smith is a member, or any Government hereafter, from handling the funds of the country for any purpose whatever without the previous sanction of Parliament.

I believe we should first make all wrongs at home right before we seek for Federation and an expensive "Central Government."

REPRESENTATION BY POPULATION

Has long been my motto. I have not supported nor could I support such a measure, as would cause me to take or hold a position in any Government, where the heads of that Government for both sections of the Province repudiate it, as do Cartier and Macdonald. I go for Representation pure and simple, without regard to a dividing line between Upper and Lower Canada.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

May not be $70,000,000, but admitting it is $58,000,000, it would take, if in silver, at $16 to the lb and 1000 lbs per cart load 3,687 horses, as many carts and harness, and at 20 feet for each horse and cart, a procession of near 12 miles in length.—Electors this is not a sum to be lightly spoken of, and what assurance have we that this debt will not increase. Was all "this debt incurred by former Governments for works of great and permanent utility?" Has not $2,000,000 of this debt been added within the last 7 years? Where are the debts contracted without the consent of Parliament? Where the loans to the Grand Trunk? How much has been incurred by the Coalition Government since its formation in 1854, let Mr. Smith answer?

THE TARIFF.

The Raising or "readjusting the Tariff on important articles so as to secure a sufficient revenue, and, at the same time, incidentally to encourage home manufactures," may be fine, as to the practice in the first, and is theory to the latter "incidentally;" but, Electors, who pays for all this? Does the high Tariff, on what we cannot produce "incidentally," benefit the farmer or mechanic?

Are we to consider all the Public Works completed? Is there not already a demand for the enlargement of the Welland Canal to enable the carrying trade of the west to be more successfully competed for by Canadians, or are our improvements ample, with the extra aid of the Grand Trunk, that we require no further improvements to develope the resources of our vast and growing country, and do you think even without this, that the economy of the Government of which Mr. Smith is a member, is of that character that it affords any guarantee for the future that "you will see that the debt will speedily diminish and finally disappear." Taking the past for example the future looks gloomy enough.

INTEMPERANCE.

Mr. Smith says he "shall advocate and sustain measures to suppress intemperance." It is only necessary to say, I have been a total abstainer for more than 3½ years. I shall support all good measures—my motto has been, and is, equal rights and privileges to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects, without distinction of party or creed.

THE DIVISION.

"I have" not "determined to reside permanently within the Division," but I shall do all in my power, assisted by your votes, to enable Mr. Smith to carry out his determination, and by keeping him at home give him an opportunity of becoming one of your "domestic institutions."

GRAND TRUNK.

I am opposed to any further aid to the Grand Trunk Railroad.

THE GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the country should be carried on by Parliamentary majorities, from both sections of the Province. Mr. Smith has assisted his colleagues to adopt and carry out the opposite course to the injury of Upper Canada, contrary to the principles which he advocated from 1848 to 1851.

IN CONCLUSION.

Mr. Smith will have all the support Government can give him. Money will not be wanting on his part to carry on the contest, while I, as an opponent to a member of the Government, must look to the spontaneous efforts of the Electors opposed to that Government, to give me that honorable position which it is in their power to bestow.

Lightning! Lightning!

PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.

200,000 Feet

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old red Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, causing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fall in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

$1.000 CHALLENGE!

to the world to produce as good a Rod, for the same price, as the Galvanized Rod, which we are now prepared to offer to the public through our authorized agents; allow no man to protect your buildings who has not our certificate of agency, with caution on the back against impositions. Orders sent to our address from the principal cities of C. W., will be attended to by O. H. Kendall in person, without extra charge. We submit two of our numerous references.

PIPER & KINDALL,
23 Young Street.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

(Signed) HENRY CROFT, D.C.L.,
Prof. of Chemistry.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods as highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

A CANADIAN

LITERARY PAPER.

FOR

The Canadian people.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. ☜

ON Saturday 1st June last, the undersigned commenced in Toronto the publication of a weekly family newspaper, entitled

"The Home Journal,"

which altogether eschews subjects of a controversal character, both in politics and religion, and presents itself as a medium for developing the literary talent of the country.

The Home Journal is devoted to choice literature:—Tales, Essays, Poetry, Reviews, Criticism, Biography, Art, Music, News, &c., and has already rallied to its columns some of the best talent of the country.

To commence the publication of a Literary Journal in Canada, after many failures of similar enterprises, was considered hazardous; but the undersigned is now happy to say, after five weeks of experience, that he has received such encouragement from both the press of the country and the public, as causes him to feel quite confident of its ultimate success.

He aims at making the Home Journal equal to any paper of its class, and to do this, a large number of subscribers are necessary. Believing that the people of Canada will contribute to its maintenance, when made aware of its importance and character.

The Home Journal is published every Saturday, at Toronto, and mailed in time to reach

THE POTATO ROT.

It seems now to be beyond a doubt that the potato rot has made its appearance, and is likely to prove very destructive in this section of Canada. We are informed that in some localities, entire fields are turning black, and there are very few patches but show indications of being affected. It is consequently impossible to tell at this stage of the disease what the extent of its ravages may be, but it is confidently stated that at least one-third of the present year's crop will be destroyed. The season has been very wet, scarcely a day passing without rain, more or less, and the wet, cold weather may have had something to do with producing the reappearance of the potato blight.

We are also informed that in several localities, the "army worm" has made its appearance and commenced its ravages.—Barley is the principal grain attacked as yet but it will doubtless extend to other descriptions, as no kind of grain escapes this universal destroyer. In the West, in many localities, the "army worm" has already destroyed whole fields of grain.—Perth Courier.

BIG PEACH ORCHARD IN OHIO.

A gentleman in the neighborhood of Middletown, in this County, has a peach orchard occupying sixty acres of ground, upon which are growing some 10,000 trees, all loaded with the best grafted fruit.—Estimating the yield at 1½ bushels to the tree, he cannot have less than from 14,000 to 15,000 bushels of peaches the present season. But to be within the mark, say he has 10,000 bushels, and sells them at $2 per bushel, the yield will bring $20,000—a fortune few men can realize in a lifetime.

VALUE OF THE BAROMETER TO THE FARMER.

Too much is usually expected from everything new. The barometer has been much lauded of late, as a sure indicator of the state of the weather; but the farmer who places implicit confidence in its indications will surely be disappointed. To the farmer who is able to have one I would say, buy it. It will prove a valuable aid to you in judging of the state of the weather. For several years I have watched its results with reference to the farmer, but my conclusions are somewhat different from those of the published accounts. The following are a few of them. If I see the barometer falling and the sky is overcast I do not expect good hay weather. Although it may not rain, it rarely clears away under such circumstances. If I see the barometer falling rapidly I expect to see wind, or rain, or both. I saved a couple of tons of hay the last summer from a smart shower by a forewarning of this kind, besides notifying my nearest neighbor of the same thing. When I see the barometer rising rapidly, no matter what the appearance of the sky may be, I am quite sure there will be no rain, and I can safely go to mowing in the shade of a thick cloud, while my neighbors are in doubt. This I regard as the most valuable practical point to the farmer. On a lowering day the farmer knows that if he should mow down acres of hay, he might lose dollars by the operation. But if it should clear away, his several tons of grass already mown will be in fine condition for the barn before another rain.—I have noticed showers when the barometer was high, without any change whatever. The farmer cannot expect a plough, however well constructed, to go without a team, nor must he expect too much from the barometer.—Dr. True's Address.

A VOLUNTEER FOR GARIBALDI.

When Garibaldi was in Sicily, a dwarfish, deformed little man, presented himself as a volunteer, but was refused by the Committee. Nothing daunted, he went to Garibaldi, and begged the General to accept him. Here again he was refused.—After one of the first battles the little individual came up to Garibaldi, and joyfully exclaimed, "See, General, you would not take me, but you could not prevent my coming. I have fought well, indeed I have—and I am wounded too." Garibaldi, who recognized the man, replied "Ah! bravo! and where are you wounded?"—After some hesitation the other showed a wound between his shoulders. "Oh, fie," said Garibaldi, "wounded in the back! I knew you would never be anything good." The soldier retired confused and ashamed. Another battle soon followed, and it was scarcely over when the poor fellow again accosted his chief: "Here I am, general, wounded again, but this time on the right side;" and pointing to a wound in his breast, he fell dead at Garibaldi's feet.

Bakery & Confectionery.

WM ARNOTT, JR.,

WOULD announce that he intends taking on the Bakery and Confectionery business in the store heretofore occupied by his father, where he hopes by correct business principles to merit and receive a share of public patronage. He will keep constantly on hand a supply of Bread, Cakes, Confectionery, &c., which he intends offering at very low prices, and to insist on cash or monthly payments with all his customers, and feels confident that by this principle he can offer such goods at prices as will convince the public that it will be to their advantage to deal with him.

PROSPECTUS

OF A NEW AND ACCURATE, ILLUSTRATED TOPOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL

Map of Upper Canada,

TOGETHER WITH A DESCRIPTIVE MAP AND DIRECTORY OF THE TOWNSHIPS OF

N'TH & S'TH MONAGHAN & OTONABEE.

CONLIN, BONNEY & Co., of Toronto, propose to publish the above work, drawn on a large scale from the most recent and accurate surveys, exhibiting all Post Offices, Money Order Offices, and Telegraph Stations throughout the Province, corrected from the latest official authority: also, the various lines of Railway, Railway Stations, with the correct distance between each, Canals, Plank and Macadamized Roads, the Main Travelled Roads between Towns and Villages, the boundaries and names of each County and Township, the great Lakes, Rivers, and principal Mill Streams. Tables shewing the Variation of Time between each County Seat in Upper Canada from the Magnetic Observatory, Toronto, the Population of each City, Town, County and Township will also be given, with other important and useful information, carefully compiled from the Census Returns of the present year. The Map will be illustrated with Views of the principal Public Buildings in the Province, executed in the best style of the art.

There will also be given on this sheet a Map on enlarged Plan, in the most minute detail, of the above Townships shewing concessions, lots, and subdivisions, with the names of the proprietors neatly engraved thereon; also, School Sections, Churches, School-houses, Mills, Manufactories, Stores, Inns, &c., together with macadamized gravel, plank and other Roads open to travel, the nearest source of rivers and mill streams, also, enlarged Plans of Towns and Villages in the Townships.

The names of all Subscribers resident owners of farms, will be engraved specially prominent on their respective lots and the position of their residence indicated; also, the names of Subscribers in the Towns and Villages will be published, with the title, profession, business &c., in each, thus constituting a complete Rural, Professional and Mercantile Business Directory.

The publishers being practical engravers, draftsmen, &c., can confidently assure the public that the execution of the above work, in every department, will be superior to anything of the kind yet published in Canada. The size of the Map will be about 48 by 72 inches; it will be handsomely coloured, varnished, and mounted on canvass, with rollers, and furnished to subscribers only, for the low price of Four dollars and a half ($4.50) payable on delivery.

Other Townships in the County will be canvassed in due time.

☞ Our Agents exhibit a REAL specimen of the above work, with our name engraved thereon.

Peterboro.' April 20th, 1859. 16.

J. G. CALLENDER,

RETURNS his grateful acknowledgments to the Inhabitants of Peterboro' and vicinity, for their liberal support during the past fourteen years, and on account of his increase of business, and with a view to the better accommodation of his patrons, will continue his visits the FIRST AND THIRD MONDAYS, TUESDAYS & WEDNESDAYS in each month, INSTEAD OF ONLY THE FIRST MONDAYS, as formerly, prepared to perform all operations of the profession, with superior neatness and durability. AND AS REASONABLE AS ANY EXPERIENCED DENTIST. His Teeth are his own selection, of the newest style, being made expressly for the Vulcanized base, now altogether used, being free from taste, much cheaper than Gold, and equal in neatness and durability, and much more agreeable in the mouth, being less weighty.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable: they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

SEVEN YEARS.

THE seven years of unrivalled success attending the

"COSMOPOLITAN ART ASSOCIATION,"

have made it a household word throughout every quarter of the Country.

Under the auspices of this popular institution over three hundred thousand homes have learned to appreciate—by beautiful works of art on their walls, and choice literature on their tables the great benefits derived from becoming a subscriber.

Subscriptions are now being received in a ratio unparalleled with that of any previous year

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Any person can become a member by subscribing three dollars, for which sum they will receive

1st.—The large and superb steel engraving, 36x38 inches, entitled.

"FALSTAFF MUSTERING HIS RECRUITS!"

2nd.—One copy, one year, of that elegantly illustrated magazine,

"The Cosmopolitan Art Journal,"

3rd.—Four admissions, during the season, to The Gallery of Paintings, 548 Broadway, N.Y.

In addition to the above benefits, there will be given to subscribers, as gratuitous premiums, over Five Hundred Beautiful Works of Art, comprising valuable paintings, marbles, parians, outlines, &c., forming a truly national benefit.

The superb Engraving, which every subscriber will receive, entitled "Falstaff Mustering his Recruits" is one of the most beautiful and popular engravings ever issued in this country. It is done on steel, in fine line and stipple, and is printed on heavy plate paper, 36 by 38 inches, making a most choice ornament, suitable for the walls of either the library, parlor or office. Its subject is the celebrated scene of Sir John Falstaff receiving in Justice Shallow's office, the recruits which have been gathered for his "ragged regiment." It could not be furnished by the trade for less than five dollars.

"THE ART JOURNAL"

is too well known to the whole country to need commendation. It is a magnificently illustrated magazine of Art, containing Essays, Stories, Poems, Gossip, &c., by the very best writers in America.

The Engraving is sent to any part of the country by mail, with safety, being packed in a cylinder postage pre-paid.

Subscriptions will be received until the Evening of the 31st of January, 1861, at which time the books will close and the premiums be given to subscribers.

No person is restricted to a single subscriptions. Those remitting $15, are entitled to five memberships and to one extra Engraving for their trouble.

Subscriptions from California, the Canadas, and all Foreign Countries, must be $3 50 instead of $3, in order to defray extra postage, etc.

For further particulars send for a copy of the elegantly illustrated Art Journal, pronounced the handsomest magazine in America. It contains Catalogue of Premiums, and numerous superb engravings. Regular price 50 cents per number. Specimen copies, however, will be sent to those wishing to subscribe, in receipt of 18 cts, in stamps or coin.

Address,

C. L. DERBY, Actuary C.A.A.
546 Broadway, N.Y.

N. B.—Subscriptions received by R. S. Patterson, Hon's Secretary for United Counties of Peterboro' & Victoria, where specimen Engravings and Art Journal can be seen.

Poisonous Minerals and Drugs.

MOTHERS TAKE HEED!

Do you when observing the uneasy actions of your children, consider that it may be more than a mere trouble that afflicts them? In nine cases out of ten, the cause of the little sufferer's anguish is WORMS, and should be at once looked to.

HEADS OF FAMILIES

Do not let your children suffer, when we present you in

JUDSON'S WORM TEA

A SAFE AND PLEASANT CURE FOR WORMS

How much better and safer would it be to have it always in the house. A little delay when a child is taken ill may often be the cause of its death while acting without delay, and by giving the MOUNTAIN HERB TEA immediately, you will not only save the child a long and tedious illness, and yourself much expense, but also feel happier in knowing that you have done your duty, and perchance saved its life.

This medicine is combined purely of

HERBS AND ROOTS

NOT A PARTICLE OF

Calomel or Mineral

IS USED IN IT.

No more filthy Vermifuge will be used by those who once use this Tea. The only active principle of all other Vermifuges and Worm Killers is MERCURY.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE we present you with a perfect likeness of Tenuco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. So quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed the lamp of life soon dies out. These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivaled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and fresh, cleaning and renovating the vital organs.

Present indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to heighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Bowel Complaints,	Debility,	Inward Weakness,
Coughs,	Fever and Ague,	Liver Complaints,
Colds,	Female Complaints,	Lowness of Spirits,
Chest Diseases	Headache,	Piles,

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tenuco, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. See the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "GREAT MEDICINE" of the Aztecs.

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 60 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, RHEUMATISM OR THE DOUTOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many tackling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins: cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure, and which secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaints, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the
